Budget Office Report Says

U.S. Expected to Keep Power Of 'Devastating Retaliation'

By Bernard Weinraub

-A congressional report said yes-terday that the United States would retain the ability to inflict "devastating retaliation" on the Soviet Union in the mid-1980s despite Soviet missile advances.

At the same time, the report fice said that the United States could expect to spend between $111 billion and $140 billion on strategic forces between now and 2000, with the higher figure depending on whether the United States should build a new mobile missile system capable of destronying Soviet missile silos.

"It should always be remembered that a major nuclear war would be a catastrophe of un-precedented proportions," the re-port to the Senate Budget Commitee emphasized. "Sarting or risking such a war wou'd be a desperate act undertaken only under great stress and in the face of a perceived threat to very knportant values. Even a war confined strictly for nuclear forces would likely cause millions of

The detailed report on United States strategic nuclear forces runs counter to some widely held views in the Pentagon and elsewhere that the Soviet Union's increasingly accurate and power-ful missile forces would make United States land-based missiles

Although the Soviet Union would probably have the capability to destroy the bulk of U.S. land-based missiles by the mid-1980s, the report said the United States would, even after attack, retain a portion of its inter-continental ballistic missiles, perhape 250 of them. > This option would retain the present United States force of Minuteman missiles, and include presently planned changes such as some Trident submarines and Cruise missiles. The cost of "finite deterrence" would be $111.2 billion until the end of the century.

A second opinion calls for expanded Cruise missile forcesabout 8,000 carried by B-52 bombers and jumbo jets-that would be launched following a Soviet attack. Such an option, called "slow counterforce." Would enable the United States to strike the Soviet Union several hours after an attack, and not immediately as in the case of missiles. This option would cost $125,5 billion.

The third option, the most exforce of mobile or submarinelaunched missiles that would provide the capability to retaliate against Soviet missles within minutes of a first strike.

The budget office said this would total $136.4 billion for a force of mobile missiles, and $139.9 billion for one centered on the Trident, which has had considerable cost overrun prob-"In any case," the report noted, lems in its early stages.

The decision, made after two days of discussion, is part of the ongoing debate in Israel between those who oppose new settlements or the expansion of existing ones in occupied territories on the grounds

The phenomenon of workers airing their grievances publicly is a new development in Soviet society, and there is no telling how long it will be allowed to last or how widespread it will become. Dissent here has usually been the preserve of the highly educated, and it has focused on political liberties rather than on the injustices and corruption of everyday life.

New Cases

Among the new cases presented today were those of a bookkeeper, a nurse, a medical driver and a worker in a metal factory; all of whom said they had been dis-missed for making various persistent complaints.

Tamara Manakova, head book eeper at a vacation center in the Crimes, said she ran into trouble when she discovered that the director's wife was taking bribes and selling counterfeit passes to the center for those who did not want to wait their turn. WASHINGTON, Jan. 10 (NYT). -Steven Seymour, whose interpreting slips dominated much of the news during President Carter's visit to Poland, has come forth to discuss what happened, to save-in his words-"some poor interpreter in the future from such embarrassment."

It was announced in Washington that he was being dropped as the interpreter for Mr. Carter's news conference that day. Mr. Seymour said that he was

The short answer was that in hindsight, having read some news accounts Mr. Seymour said he was "hard put to dispute" that he made some "slip-ups."

The mistakes, in his mind. were not major. He acknowledged that for Mr. Carter's expression about leaving Washington, he chose the verb that has the implication of "abandoning" a place. As to Mr. Carter'e comments about the Polis' people's "desires" for the future instead of using a Polish word with neutral connotations, he chose one that is used to describe sexual

He cited two main factors: the weather and the lack of an advance text of Mr. Carter's remarks, and they went hand-inhand in his explanation.

On Dec. 22, he said, he flew to Washington from New York to be briefed on the trip. He had been selected by the State Department as the best available Polish-language interpreter on its roster of U.S. citizens with security clearances.

No Advance Copy

While in Washington, he said, he asked whether he could have a copy of Mr. Carter's arrival atatement in Warsaw. Even though it was six days away this was not so unusual a request, since these bland documents are often done well in advance. But he was told it was not ready. On Dec. 27. Mr. Seymour was again in Washington, this time to depart by commercial aircraft for Warsaw, and was told again that no text was available

Newfoundland Premier Defends Controversial Baby Seal Hunt NEW YORK, Jan. 10 (AP),-Newfoundland's Premier

Frank Duff Moores yesterday defended the annual seal hunt off Canada's eastern coast as "one of the most humane and carefully controlled in the world."

He criticized the U.S. Congress resolution that last year condemned the clubbing of newborn harp seals in Canada, saying: "The hypocrisy of your Congress is hard to understand." U.S. citizens, he said, killed between 30,000 and 40,000 seals off the coast of Alaska last year and their value to the United States was greater than the $3.5-million income from eastern Canade's seal hunt.

"We feel a little upset when they pass resolutions against us and yet do it themselves," Mr. Moores said at a news

The Canadian province's Premier arrived in the United States on Sunday with a group of Canadian seal experts to "set the record straight" about the hunt that begins each year in mid-March and this year has a quota of 10,000 harp seals in the northwest Atlantic. Last year's quota was 170,000.

The clubbing of seal cubs, defended as essential to the livelihood of thousands of Newfoundland fishermen and the

Fundamental Reasons Exist For Cambodia-Vietnam War

BANGKOK, Jan. 10 (NYT).-However puzzling Cambodia's motivation may be for provoking a major military and diplomatic showdown with Vietnam, its powerful neighbor, there is no doubt that fundamental reasons do exist for confrontation.

When the Khmer empire reached its low point under Burmese and Stamese attacks in the 17th century, Vietnam joined Cambodia's other neighbors in expansionism at Cambodia'a expense. Only France's arrival on the Indochinese scene in the last century halted the process of dis-

Communist victory in 1975.

A source with recent access to senior Cambodian officials reported that shortly before Cambodia's rupture of diplomatic re-lations, Dec. 31, he had been told that in 1976 Vietnam had demanded that Cambodia negotiate border changes in Hanoi's favor, not only on land but in territorial waters surrounding the Vietna-

By Thomas W. Lippman RIYADH, Jan. 10 (WP),-The rulers of Saudi Arabia, recovered from their shock at Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's startling peace initiative, are now giving him strong support. They are doing so, according to informed sources here, partly be-cause they want a Middle East settlement on the terms that Mr. Sadat is seeking and partly because he left them no other choice

—just as he calculated when he decided to go to Israel.

The Saudis are not confident that Mr. Sadat will succeed in achieving a peace agreement that other Arabs could accept. The message they delivered to President Carter during his brief visit here was that Mr. Sadat needs U.S. help, in the form of a blunt message to Israel on the need to withdraw from all territory occupied in the 1967 war and grant self-determination to the Palestinlans. But if there was ever any serious possibility of overt Saudi opposition to Mr. Sadat's initiative, it has receded. Mr. Sadat's visit to Jerusalem made shortly after a trip here in which he did not tell the Saudis what he was planning, divided the government and led to sharp sm among some elements of the Saudi leadership, according to informed sources. While the Saudis generally refrained from criticizing Mr. Sadat in public, there were strongly held views in private that Mr. Sadat had made

The innately cautious and conservative royal rulers reportedly resolved the issue in Mr. Sadat's

favor, fearing that if they did not, it could lead to Mr. Sadat's downfall and replacement by a iess congenial ruler in Egypt, to a resurgence of Arab radicalism or to a strain in the Saudis' carefully cultivated ties to the United States "There was never any dispute over Mr. Sadst's objectives," said a Saudi official who was among the critics of the Jerusalem trip. The question was over his tactics. He made mistakes."

As is often the case where the Saudis are concerned, there were more elements to be Weighed in judging Mr. Sadat's move than political or international considerations. The Saudis take seriously the religious and symbolic implications of their policies and are uncomfortable at being forced to take sides in disputes among the Arabs. According to this Saudi official, Mr. Sadat's moves stirred criticism on several of these grounds.

First, he said, Mr. Sadat should not have prayed in Jerusalem's al-Aqsa Mosque, a holy shrine of Islam, under Israeli military pro-tection. In addition, in the view of his Saudi critics, Mr. Sadat insulted the other Arabs by his repeated assertions that Egypt was the heart of the Arab world and the other Arabs could not act without Egypt.

Then he embarrassed Saudi Arabia, which has come to enjoy the role it has assumed in recent years as a political power in the Arab world and expects a certain respect as the financial benefactor that keeps Egypt affoat. Finally, the critics here said, Mr. Sadat made a mistake by playing the Arabs' trump card—recogni-tion of Israel without any assurance that he would get something satisfactory in return.

Once it became clear that Mr. Sadat was determined to forge ahead whether the other Arabs liked it or not, however the Saudis began to come down off the fence on his side. They have not spoken out in favor of his trip to Jerusalem, but apparently are satisfied that the terms he is demanding as the price of peace are terms acceptable to them and to other moderate Arabs. The Saudi leadership is said to have been reassured by the out-come of the Christmas summit in Ismailia between Mr. Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin-not hecause the results were positiva hut becaus it became clear that Mr. Sadat was sincere in saying he would not settle for a bilateral peace treaty with Israel.

If Mr. Sadat had holted to a separate peace it would have put this country in an intolerable position, observers here believe. The Saudis would have had to choose between Egypt on the one hand and the rest of the Arabs on the other, which is the kind of choice the Saudis do not like

Crown Prince Fahd, the most powerful policymaker in the kingdom, told an American television interviewer during Mr. Carter's visit that even if this country and the United States were not in full agreement on the terms of a peace settlement, he was pleased that Mr. Carter was stopping off to see Mr. Sadat. The Saudis were reassured that the United Etates also opposes a bilateral Egypt-Israel treaty and apparently succeeded in moving the Americans closer to the Arab position on the terms of peace As defined by a senior Foreign Ministry official, the terms acceptable to the Saudis are virtually identical to those being sought by Mr. Sadat-an agree ment in principle that Israel will eventually withdraw from all occupied territory, with the details and implementation to be worked out over time if necessary. They also include self-determination for the Palestinlans, permission for large numbers of them to return to the West Bank and restoration of at least token Arab control over Al Agsa and other Islamic shrines of East

The Saudi press, which reflects official thinking on foreign affairs, has expressed skepticism about Mr. Carter's declaration that he and Mr. Sadat achieved "identical views" about the terms for peace in their meeting in Aswan. But having decided that Mr. Sadat is on the right track the Saudis are now beginning to use their enormous influence to bring the United States and the other Arabs around to the same

Begin said today that there was no basis for reports originating in Washington and elsewhere that Israel was contemplating giving up territory in the Negev Desert, within Israel proper, in exchange for settlements in the Sinai. He did not, however, rule out this proposition as a subject for discussion when political talks open in Jerusalem next Monday. As yet there is no agreement

BENNINGTON, Vt., Jan. 10 (NYT).—It was with considerable surprise that Frank Velkas discovered recently that he had been living out Henrik Ibsen's "An Enemy of the People," a 19thcentury Norwegian political satire. In the play, it all ends badly for the medical officer of the municipal baths in a small resort town after he discovers that the bathwater is slowly poisoning people. He refuses to keep quiet about it and learns the futility of personal courage. But the curtain is not yet down for Mr. Velkas, a psychologist in this small college town, who learned that the public water supply for 16,000 residents here contained dangerously high levels of lead and that the problem might exist in many communities across the nation. He refuse to keep quiet about it and is learning about personal courage, "If it were possible, I'd say that Ibsen stole the plot from what's happening to me here," Mr. Velkas said. "That's how close the resemblance is. Difference is, nowadays they don't throw stones at your house to drive you out; they just treat you like a parish countersue you for court costa."

A National Tirst'

Most public officials here, at the federal Environmental Protection Agency offices in Boston and at the Vermont Health De-partment in Montpeller, readily credit Mr. Velkas for bringing this town's water problem efforts, Bennington will become the first community in the nation to replace all its lead water pipes with a $355,000 federal grant when the ground thaws.

But the officials deny his charges that they have persecuted him and are covering up a na-tionwide problem two personal beliefs that last month led Mr. Velkas to refuse to accent the EPA's annual Citizens Environmental Merit Award.

They're not going to shut me up with a treatment program for one town and an award, no sir,

Mr. Velkas said.

The psychologist is easily given to outrage and to angry amaze-ment at the cynicism of others. At any given moment, he may be outraged about a half-dozen things, and while his facts are usually unimpeachable and the conclusions be draws from them massailable, the combined effect often leads people to consider him something of a crank.

Now that the water problem has gone into a lull for the winter, he has returned to badgering the Central Intelligence Agency for access to what he insists are its secret files on him. Since the EPA award was announced, criticism of him has been muted here, but some of his original detractors still harbon strong feelings about him. "The man is a nuisance," said Richard Perrot, a member of the Bennington Board of Selectmen. "He started coming to all these meet-ings and demanding this and requesting that. He never had anything substantial to go on, and finally he got real bore So finally I just told him to get out and go about his business saying, 'We don't need you here.'

"hanne' Discovery Bennington's problems with lead in its water became known almost by accident in October, 1976, when researchers of the state's Health Department and scientists of the U.S. Center for Disease Control in Atlanta came here to study the effects of lead

The justices let stand a decision upholding the one-house veto, which enables either the House or the Senate to decide unilaterally whether any of a wide range of governmental actions will survive.

Congress has passed numerous laws which an executive agency can take certain actions, such as issuing regulations for federal elections, but where either the House or the Senate can cancel the actions with a one-house veto. About 300 provisions of 200 laws incorporate this one-house veto, allowing for potential congressional disapproval of programs under which 13 Cabinet departments and other governmental units spend billions of dollars annually.

Every president since Herbert Hoover, supported by the Justice Department, has argued that the one-house veto is an unconstitutional incursion into the executive domain, although various administrations have endorsed the device for specific, limited uses. Narrow Restriction courts on procedural grounds. The court thus provided strong evidence that it was prepared to accept restrictions on freedom of the press to avoid any risk on unfair trial in criminal cases.

The justices left standing judges' orders prohibiting lawyers, parties to the coses, witnesses or jurors from making any stateent outside the courtroom and its formal proceedings, restrictions that are characterized by the press as "gag orders."

U.S. Will Not Question Park About Ties to Seoul Regime

By Robert L. Jackson

SECUL, Jan. 10.—U.S. Justice Department investigators, apparentily to soothe the feelings of South Korean officials, have agreed to avoid asking businessman Tongsun Park any questions that could implicate leaders of government here in the scandal involving purchases of influence in the U.S. Congress, it was learned yesterday.

A still-secret memo of understanding to be eigned later this week by the department and Mr. Park, the indicted South Korean lobbyist, contains language that reflects this limitation on questioning, according to sources close to the case.

[U.S. and South Korean aides today signed a mutual prosecution-assistance agreement, completing their legal preparation for the questioning of Mr. Park, UPI reported. The agreement is effective immediately.]

The memo on Mr. Park's questioning generally restricts the intion to his activities in the United States or in the presence of U.S. politicians and excludes his relationship, if any, with

Energy Plan Is Opposed in NAACP Paper

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10 (NYT). The NAACP has broken with the Carter administration and allied itself with the oil industry in the current battle over energy legislation.

The association argues that blacks, who have suffered from unusually high unemployment, are dependent for jobs on an expanding economy which in turn requires greater efforts to increase energy supplies.

UN Meeting Told Mediterranean Most Polluted Sea

MONTE CARLO, Jan. 10 (AP), -An Egyptian microbiologist told a UN-sponsored anti-pollution conference yesterday that the Mediterranean was the world's most polluted sea.

"It is estimated that about 120,000 tons of mineral oils, 60,000 tens of detergents, 100 tons of mercury, 3,800 tons of lead, 2,400 tons of chromium, 21,000 tons of zinc, 90 tons of organo-chlorine pesticides, 1,120,000 tons of nitro-gen and phosphorus and 2,500 curies of radio-nuclides enter the Mediterranean annually," said Dr. Mostafa Tolba, executive director of the conference.

Dr. Tolba's plea for action to clean up the Mediterranean opened a six-day conference here of the United Nations Environment Program, which is drafting a new international treaty to curb manmade wastes in the Mediterranean

VIENNA, Jan. 10 (NYT).-Czechoslovakia's Charter 77 group, which is seeking broader burnan and civil rights, has chalenged the country's Communist leadership to open a dialogue with its spokesmen "in appropriate places-not in prison cells." The appeal for a serious debate on the movement's demands was contained in a document it issued on Jan. 1 to mark its first anni-

The group of dissidents became known to the public in Czecho-alovakia and abroad through the Charter 77 manifesto, which it issued at the beginning of last year. The document, calling for more freedom, bore the signatures of about 400 Czechoslovaks, including former Communist party and state officials, scholars, scientists, artists and writers. Since then, more persons have publicly endorsed the human-rights manifesto, although the authorities have reacted to k by subjecting many Charter 77 back-ers to arrest, repeated questioning by the police, dismissal from jobs and other harassment. At last count, 932 Czeoboslovaks are on record as supporters of the dissident movement. Com-munists in Hungary, Poland, Romania and Yugoslavia have publicly expressed sympathy for Charter 77. The Czechoslovak group has also received verbal backing from the Communist parties in France, Italy, Spain and other Western nations.

Members of Charter 77-as the group itself has come to be known —said they had sent the latest document to the National Assembly and the government and deliberately waited several days before making the main points available to foreign news media.

where meteorites would be found without actually seeing one fall in that area.

Meteorites are hunks of stony or metallic material that survive the searing trip through earth's atmosphere to strike the surface. They are of interest to scientists studying extraterrestrial material for clues to the origins of earth and the solar system.

Last year, Dr. Cassidy led scientific team that found 11 meteorites in the general area of the new discovery, a region of the Transantarctic Mountains in Victoris Land about 120 miles north of McMurdo Station, the principal U.S. scientific outpost.

After the last expedition, Dr. Cassidy theorized that meteorites which fall constantly over the earth-might be preserved in quantity and quality within Antarctica's deep ice. The cold and ice protect against erosion and chemical reactions that destroy the space rocks elsewhere.

Dr. Cassidy reported that most of the newly found meteorites were relatively small, with the largest weighing about 17 pounds. One of those found last year weighed 898 pounds, making it one of the largest ever uncovered on earth.

Dr. Cyril Ponnamperums of the University of Maryland, a noted meteorite expert, termed Dr. Cassidy's latest discovery a "rare and fentastic find."

Without the need for going to the moon, we now have the opportunity of collecting extraterrestrial materials that have been preserved in excellent condition by the extreme-cold conditions in Anterctica," Dr. Ponnamperuma

Beverly Sills Putting Voice to Bed

Beverly Sills, the Brooklynof the New York City Opera, the Metropolitan and many other leading international companies, will retire as a singer in the fall of 1980 and take a post as co-director of the City Opera.

The 48-year-old artist's decision was announced yesterday after-noon by John Samuels, chairman of both the City Opera and the New York City Center, and by Julius Rudel, the company's director, Mr. Rudel will remain as co-director.

"I'll be 51 years old when I quit," Miss Sills said at a news conference, 'I'll have no more operas I want to sing in, no more roles I want to do. There are no more opera houses I haven't sung in. I will have recorded everything I ever dreamed of recording. I'll put my voice to bed and go quietly.

Miss Sills, who made her City Opera debut in October of 1955. seemed pleased that her retirement would come exactly 25 years later, "I'm tidy, I'm also very lucky. There's not a thing I regret not having done. hate to say it, but I did it all."

Though plans are still sketchy, Miss Sills said, "I would like my last singing appearance to he from the City Opera stage, in a gala fund-raising concert. It would be a sort of family goodhye, my farewell present to the

1,400 Olivetti TC800 terminals update a Canadian banking network. Banks know whom to trust.

The problem

To progressively update a banking data transmission network that spans a continent vaster than all of Europe - four thousand miles from coast to coast. In the process to automate in real time the counter and back-office transactions of most of the bank's more than 1,700 branches.

The customer

Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce is one of the world's largest banks with assets in excess of 30 billion dollars. In Canada it has the largest network of branches with representation in all ten provinces and the two northern territories. Several remote communities in the Arctic are served by aircraft while a shipboard service is available to communities along the St. Lawrence river.

The solution

To install intelligent banking terminals at most banking locations. The initial order calls for the installation of 1,400 Olivetti TC800's in branches in the provinces of Quebec and British Columbia and in the city of Ottawa, the country's capital.

The choice

The bank had excellent experience with an earlier generation of Olivetti banking terminals. To integrate into the bank's main on-line network the branches in which these earlier units had been installed and to expand the network to many other branches, the TC800 was chosen because of its intelligence and outstanding capabilities in large data processing and transmission networks.

Companies everywhere are choosing Olivetti systems

Here are the latest world-wide totals: 330,000 accounting machines; 140,000 data processing systems and personal mini-computers; 65,000 terminals and data collection units; 150,000 teleprinters and telecommunications units.

Republicans and the Canal

With Sen. Baker visiting Panama and Sen. Laxait leading a "truth squad" across the country to fight the canal treatles, the Republicans are getting deeper into that issue by the day. This is not surprising; Mr. Reagan made it an important part of his campaign and it would be one of the tests by which the Republicans choose their candidate in 1980. Moreover, there are precedents in Republican history which may make the party leaders nostalgically wistful.

In the 1920 campaign, the overriding issue was the League of Nations. Republicans in the Senate fought against it; some moderates proposed amendments in the form of reservations; President Wilson refused this—and the Leagoe lost the United States. Bnt the Republicans won the presidential election with of all people, Warren G. Harding.

This chain of events might well suggest a duplication over Panama to Republicans who are disturbed about the progressive weakening of their voting strength. It is especially appealing to those who regard their best hope to lie in recruiting Democratic conservatives from the South and West and abandoning Eastern liberalism.

One aspect of the new Republicanism is rather curious, considering the sensitivity of the American people to foreign entanglements since Vietnam. For whereas the conservative Republicans immediately after the war were essentially isolationist-like Sen. Tast-the present breed take after Secretary of State Dulles. They want the United States to assert itself internationally, and to hold onto the Canal Zone in the teeth of a good deal of alien opinion, especially in Latin America, doubtlessly seems to them a good way to hegin.

To express senatorial opinion of the canal treatles in the form of reservations or amendments could create a lot of trouble in Panama, which has its own breed of intense nationalists. But if any arrangements could be worked out to bring Republican moderates into support, at least a stalemate such as that over the League might be averted and a measure of bipartisanship restored over foreign policy.

This might also diminish the influence of such Republicans as Laxalt and Reagan—as well as Sen. Dole, who fought in the courts to keep the Hungarian crown away from Hungary. The process would not be an easy one, nor would the results be clear-cut, in all probability. The Republicans are thrashing around to find some new appeal; the American citizenry is uneasy about a number of phases of foreign policy; even the current administration has not yet found its feet in this area.

But at least the concentration of interest on a single question, the heady and obsourantist reversion to mere patriotic rhetoric. might be averted if a confrontation over the canal treaties could be compromised. And that in turn might help the United States to avoid a major confrontation on a national scale between two utterly opposed partiesa phenomenon which has been fortunately rare in American political history.

The measures needed to lift the industrial democracles out of their deepest and longest recession since the 1930s have been the subject of a dialogue of the deaf between Washington and Bonn. A new international study forecasts reduced growth and rising unemployment for Western Europe in 1978 -and perhaps for some time to come-uniess West Germany, Japan and the United States soon adopt expansionary measures, How can Bonn be brought to accept this

The study, by the 24-nation Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development in Paris, expects the indicated tax-cut and spending plans of the Carter administration to be adequate, if Congress acts quickly. Japan, as before, is pledging cooperation; the question is whether its follow-through will be better this time. But West Germany, which bnys much more from its West European neighbors than the other two locomotive economies, has again refused to join in a new effort to pull the rest of the world into a faster recovery. In fact, Bonn now challenges the whole idea that the big three, despite their control of 80 per cent of the non-Communist industrial world's production, can bring prosperity to others, as the OECD study suggests, by stimulating internal demand, production and, thus, imports from weaker countries.

That's a new thesis. Until now, West Germany has invoked its right to set its own pace, lest too much stimulus revive inflation. But a commitment was obtained from Chancellor Schmidt, at the sevennation London summit last May, that he would take remedial measures if West Germany's stated growth target of 5 per cent in 1977 was not being achieved. The trouble was that forecasts of a shortfall were brushed aside until September; tax cuts and spending increases then proposed to the Bundestag came too late to improve a poor 1977 growth rate of less than 3 per cent.

Yet a repetition of the 1977 experience now appears to be shaping up for 1978. West Germany's Economics Ministry acknowledges that growth at best will reach 4 per cent; the OECD forecast is 3 1/4 per cent for West Germany and 2 1/2 per cent for West Europe as a whole. Bonn asserts that it is unreasonable to expect the German economy to do better as long as the rest of the world is in recession. Exports account for 25 to 30 per cent of West Germany's gross national product and half or more of the cutput of some industries. These exports, Bonn argues, will have to find a market if the German economy is to achieve full

The argument has become circular. West Europe cannot recover unless the lead is taken by West Germany, which imports four to five times as much from France, for example, as does the United States. But West Germany contends it cannot recover unless West Europe recovers first.

Not only President Carter and his chief economic advisers, but Prime Minister Callaghan of Britain and President Giscard d'Estaing of France have tried and failed to break through this chicken-egg argument with Schmidt. Foreseeing concerted pressure, Schmidt has insisted on postponing the next seven-nation economic summit, to be held in Bonn, until July.

What worries the OECD at the start of the industrial world's fifth year of recession is that low growth rates and high unemployreverse. Low growth, the new OECD study argues, means "low levels of productive in-" vestment that could prejudice job opportunities for years to come." Protectionism increasingly is hampering trade, which heretofore has grown faster than, and spurred, production. There is a danger that "cyclical conditions would gradually get built into the structure of the OECD economies." Four years of economic singgishness has also weakened virtually every democratic government in Europe.

Schmidt undoubtedly is aware of the dangers. His supporters in the trade unions and his business-infloenced opponents of the Christian Democratic Union favor more economic stimulus. But his political judgment evidently is that unemployment affects only 5 per cent of the voters while inflation worries everyone. His coalition partners of the Free Democratic party evidently take the

What needs to be explored is whether there is not some way to respond to Bonn's concerns. One possibility would be a joint move by most of the industrial countries simultaneously to stimulate growth at home and to increase ald to the developing countries while stabilizing the dollar-mark relation-

Communist Realities

Those innocents who credulously swallowed the propaganda that everything in Indochina and elsewhere in the Third World would work out wonderfully if revolution were allowed to take its own course are now learning the hard truth. Tank battles between extreme left-wing regimes in the Horu of Africa have failed to arouse worldwide protest. Laos is on the verge of starvation under its new masters. The jungle toughs who seized power in Cambodia have pursued a campaign of extermination that almost defies description. Tens of thousands of South Vietnamese are fleeing their country at the risk of their lives to escape from totalitarian oppression. And now two Communist states-Cambodia and Vietnam-are waging war against one another. According to Markist - Leninist teachings, all these things should be unthinkable.

Whatever problems there are, are

By George F. Will

WASHINGTON.—Properly understood, which means understood in the context of recent and coming and continuous tax increases, Carter's proposed tax cuis have two flaws: wrong shape, wrong size.

He proposes cuts totaling $25 billion, including about $2.3 bil-lion in excise and employer payroll taxes, $6 billion to $7 billion in business taxes, and the lion's share (about $15 billion) in per-sonal income taxes. But $25 biltion in tax cuts would not offset taxes increased last year, tax in-creases proposed last year that may be emacted soon, and the "inflation tax" that the administration cannot stop.

Americans will pay about nine in new Social Security taxes in the next 10 years. It is unclear how many tens of billions they will pay in new energy taxes. And the ruinous chemistry of inflation acting upon a progressive tax system—devaluing fixed-value tions, while floating people into higher tax brackets-will infate the government's tax bite.

A Calculation

The Congressional Budget Office calculates that even if the United States has "only" a 46per-cent inflation rate by 1979, taxes generated by inflation would rise from $24 billion in 1978 to $150 billion in 1982, or $408 bil-lion in five years—16 per cent of all tax collections.

Walter Heller, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, estimates that Social Security energy and "Inflation" tax increases will increase annual tax collections about $40 billion by 1979. Some, but less than half, of this will be counteracted by increased Social Security benefits, increased energy spending and tax credits and expansionby-inflation of government expenditures.

The biss of Carter's tax-cut proposals is toward individuals rather than business and toward low and middle-income individuals. The primary aim of the proposals is to quicken consumption. This is politically understandable but economically dubious at a moment when consumption is booming, investment is alarmingly—but reasonably—weak, and there is little reason for hoping that a sharp stimulus to consumer demand will stimu-late investment.

Adding to Deficit The approximately $15 billion in individual tax cuts are not only unjustified as stimulus, but will add to the huge anticipated deficit and may increase expectations of inflation, thereby counteracting the effect of the businest-tax cuts in improving the climate for investment. Hence the size of the individual cuts, relative to the business cuts, could make the entire package a net loss to the economy.

The proposal for a phased cut of 4 percentage points in the business tax rate, like the proposal for liberalizing the invest-ment tax credit, is targeted at not a bullet of sufficient caliber. The basic economic problem is that there is too much risk in the investment process. Inflation, a severe recession and governerated uncertainties related to legislation and regulations have raised what economists call the "hurdle rate." That is the rate of return on investment that must be anticipated before businessmen will be eager to invest. It probably would take a cut of 8 percentage points in the business tax rate—twice the size of Carter's proposed cut—to lower opportunity.

Steeper Scale

Regarding individuals, Cart proposes cutting the tax rate the bottom bracket by 14 per of and in the top bracket by 3 pt cent. This would make the t system more steeply progressive So would the proposal to chang the $750 exemption to a $250 credit. That would shift a $1.5 billion burden from low-incom groups to single persons wit taxable incomes of at least $12.00 and families with incomes of least $16,000.

As the tax system bec more steeply progressive, the issues of inflation are magnified And as the system becomes mo progressive, the tex burden fal with increasing severity on the classes that traditionally bei performed society's investment

But, increasingly, a function covernment is to ration thin that government makes scatt As government policy (including inflation, which by now is policy) discourages individ from performing the investig function, government edges ward performing that function The benign label for that will i "credit allocation." The day-long meeting of the seven Fed governors ended late Friday afternoon with four mors—led by Arthur Burns, departing cheirman—voting the half-point increase to 6 1/2 per cent. Mr. Partee and David Lily opposed the move. The seventh governor, Philip Jackson jr., was on vacation and

The Fed said the action was taken to belp chore up the dollar, which has been weakened by deficits in the U.S. trade and balance-of-payments accounts mainly the result of huge consumption of imported oil. It was the first time this decade that the discount rate, which the Fed charges on its loans to member banks and which also serves at times as a signal of interest rate policies, has re-sponded to international events.

Under less unusual circumstances the discount rate follows, rather than leads, the market. But Mr. Burns, who is due to be replaced at the end of this month by William Miller, chairman of Textron Inc., had fought for a dramatic increase in interest rates to impress on foreign dollar holders U.S. determination to defend the dollar's international value. Mr. Burns, who had long wanted a policy of more active inter-vention to support the dollar, finally won the administration over to this view last week. But, according to informed sources

Abu Dhabi's output now averages 1.6 million barrels a day. Mr. Otelba told the newspaper the capacity of the offshore field will be raised to 1 million barrels a day but future production levels will be decided in the light of the government's con-

After his second day of meetings with officials, Alan Wolff, President Carter's deputy special trade representative, went out of his way to praise the "goodwill" and 'spirit of cooperation" of his Japanese counterparts and bemoan-ed "an unfortunate air of confrontation" which he said had marked the negotiations since they began late last summer.

Diplomats interpreted the sharp change in tone as a sign that the United States believed it had won from Japan the maximum concessions possible for now. These concessions, which include tariff cuts, quota increases and a stimulation of Japan's economy to spur imports, are still being discussed in Mr. Wolff's meetings with Japanese officials. In a meeting with U.S. correspondents today, Mr. Wolff indicated the United States was seeking tariff cuts in addition to the 318 already announced by Japan. Statement on Friday

'Real' Stock Market Issues Seen Weaker

NEW YORK, Jan. 10 (AP-DJ). -Through most of 1977, some market analysts emphasized the difference between the perfor-mance of the popular averages and what they termed "the real market"—the hundreds of secondary issues that are not part of the averages or are not large enough to affect them.

And they were correct. It has been a two-tier market and declines in such indicators as the 30-stock Dow Jones industrial average and even Standard & Poor's 500-stock index have maskd the relative strength of prices in the broad market. The popular indicators are influenced, in one way or another, by the size of the component companies and the total amount of stock outstanding in each company.

This distinction between the averages and the "real" market worked in favor of a bullish diversification stance last year. However, it is becoming a major hurdle for investor sentiment this disaster area—the Dow Jones industrial average fell more than 31 per cent in the past 53 weeks -can the smaller stocks in which investors have neat profits be far required by law. Governments are urged to strengthen legislation to better control agreements, mergers, abuses of dominant positions, and restrictive practices in connection with transfers of technology.

Credit Talks Stall Elsewhere at the OECD, talks on export credit terms stalled today after a disagreement between U.S. and European participants, conference sources said. The talks, intended to reformulate an international agreement on export credits, have adjourned until Thursday while the Belgian presiding delegation tries to negotiate a compromise. The existing agreement, which was to have expired at the end of 1977 but has informally been extended to Jan, 13, set the minimum competitive interest rate at 8 per cent for credits over 5 years to highly-developed countries, 7.75 per cent to intermediate countries, and 7.5 per cent to the less developed countries.

For two-to-five-year credits, the minimum rate is 7.75 per cent to highly developed nations, and 7.25 per cent to all others.

Most of the fee increases were imposed without public an-nouncements or notification to customers, some of whom re-

Spokermen for investment houses blamed rising costs of doing business and poor broker-age-bouse profits for the fee increases.

Stockbrokers have been free to set their own commission charges since May 1, 1975, when fixed commissions were ended by the Securities and Exchange Commission. Since then, fees charged to institutional investors—the brokers' biggest customers-have been discounted by 30 to 40 per cent, but retail rates—charged to the smaller investor-have not

Three ways to enter the gold market:

If you really want to own gold, this is the way to do it. Get yourself a 100 oz. bar ($16,350 at this writing plus applicable sales tax), plop it on the coffee table, make sure it doesn't get stolen, lock it up at night—and you've got yourself a real conversation piece. If the price of gold goes up 10%, you've made yourself $1,635 minus the sales tax and assay fees. Or you could buy gold and have a bank keep it for you. Same $16,350—plus sales tax and storage costs—but no conversation piece.

2. Gold Stocks.

This is another way to enter the market but bear in mind that some North American "gold stocks" actually make or lose most of their money from other minerals, while many of the other mining companies are located in a country with a rather shaky political outlook. Of course, the quality of corporate management and many other factors affect the value of any stock.

3. Gold Futures.

This, in our opinion, is the most intelligent way to participate. No sales tax. No assay fees. No storage costs. In fact, you don't even own the gold. You own the right to buy (or sell) it at some future date at a pre-determined price. In futures trading you put up a deposit of less than 10% of the value of the gold. So if you bought a 100 oz. contract and the price went up 10%, you could double your money by merely closing out the contract. Needless to say, if the price went down, you would lose money—a risk inherent in any form of investment.

HOLY SECRETS

By Richard Rhodes. Doubleday. 279 pp. $8.95.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

AS A novelist, Richard Rhodes will never be faulted for not attempting the difficult. In his first work of fiction, "The Un-godly." he tried to imagine in detail the events of the famous Donner Party incident, in which part of a group of migrants to California survived the winter of 1848-47 in the Sierra Nevads mountains by eating the flesh of those among them who had died. Not incidentally, Rhodes succeeded rather well at this task. Now, in his second novel, "Holy Secrets," he has written of men and women in a different sort of crisis—that of the social disjunctions created by the pres sure for women's liberation—and he has told his story from the point of view of a succe Midwestern gynecologist. If he has not entirely succeeded this time around, he has certainly created a novel of intricate vectors and ironies.

The thematic possibilities that Rhodes sets up at the beginning are especially rich. Tom Haldane, the novel's protagonist, has a thriving gynecological practice in Kansas City, Mo., but for complex psychological reasons—not the least of them that he himself was born by caesarian section after his mother had shot herself to death—he specializes in cancer surgery and has not de-livered a baby in years. At the start of the novel, Tom's 13-year marriage to Elizabeth is hreaking up—the victim of Tom's be-lated recognition that their relationship has been based on reciprocal punishment and gullt. Tom is forced to recognize that both his marriage and his decision to become a gynecologist may have been based on a profound antagonism toward women.

So far; so good. And there are some highly skillful touches in the healing process that follows. There is a series of eloquent letters to Tom from an anonymous widow who has discovered after her husband's death that he consorted with prostitutes and is now determined to understand in what way she failed him. There is Tom's relationship with Packy and Rachel Carlyle, a brother and sister whom Tom has known since childhood and who during the course of the novel serve to illustrate the essential interchangeability of essential interchangeaninity of males and females. (Tom. goes on a hunting trek with Packy and then on a gambling trip to Lake Tahoe with Rachel.)

And there is the insight that Tom eventually arrives at, partly as a result of his deepening love for Packy and Rachel. "Rachel was mysterious, but not because she was female: because she was an adult, and kept her own counsel in the world ... The mystery wasn't gender ... mystery was human beings, their uniqueness, the vast range their expression, their potentia for work and love, the fort right ways they joined will wolves and whales and wild beest, they had never been d mesticated.

"They were still wild. Whe they matured through their ke years of learning, as many of not, they were orderly and gran as wild animals are, shaped the world, moving to its me as easily as he and Ran walked this mountain show Except in play: in play condently abandoned, as their gran ity deserved."

What then is the problem wi "Holy Secrets"? The problem that certain elements of Top seem like clichés. Rachel's fine ly achieving her first organ Tom's decision to start delive ing children once again, ever Becky Shire, the spirited did rights leader who refuses to put down in the face of termin cancer—each has quotation mark around it and a rising tremer violins in the background. An one suspects they have bee forced to become cliches by it author's refusal to let them themselves.

For Rhodes insists upon wit ing. He smothers his story as his characters were enough the example, it isn't enough the his characters with writing Fi demonstrated berself to be -person who can mix busines and pleasure. Rhodes must ste in and elbow us. "She set limit and kept them, Apollonian, Edi sbeth (Tom's former wife) with out limits, Dionysian, who playe life ss a vicious game. He kne now which one he chose," W knew about 100 pages earling Or, for example, Rachel sleep after lovemaking, "Sleep, man malian, a nurturing. Her sim around the pillow, her brown smooth shoulders, her face turn ed to him unseeing. Mysteries o en to him unseeing. Mysteries o' mind, black boxes ... gamblin, haughed the mind away. Sies; folded it. Lovemaking returned it to body where it listened struck dumb, Having no work for something earlier than were night in day, sound in smell, loosening like the loosening placental cotyledons. Before on sciousness this venereal an macity, a gift of evolution What is left for the reader imagine?

Not permitted to breathe of their own, many of the action and characters of "Holy A crets' expire and shrivel into a many platitudes. The result is curiously disjointed-a potential dramatic love story smother to death by intelligence, and were. Actually, if one steps had and looks at it from a distance "Holy Secrets" can be seen + sequel to Rhodes's Donner Park novel—a further exploration of human cannibalism and an si tempt to resolve destructives into healing love. But the rest lution is willed intellected rather than allowed to develop ganically. This accounts for the overwritten quality of the next It also suggests that Rhodes still a bock sway from his result Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

The auction given in the diagram needs some explanation. North-South were using the Drury convention, so North's twoclub response to one heart was artificial. The two-diamond rebid indicated that the third-hand opening was a minimum or a sub minimum, and Nord intended to rest safely in two hearts. But he changed his mind when West doubled, suggesting that the dismond honors were well-placed for North-South

North took a shot at four hearts. West led the ace of dia-monds and continued the suit, hoping to give his partner a ruff Since the diamond queen was marked by the double, South had no trouble finessing the jack. But he then had a difficult planning problem. With diamond length and strength on the left it seemed likely that the trumps were on his right, so he led the jack of hearts.

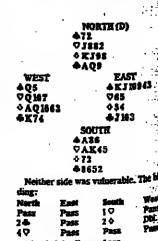

This offered the possibility of picking up all the trumps if East held Q-10-x. But that holding was in the West hand, an unexpected development. East had chosen not to open with a weak two-bid in spades, so South was not prepared for a 6-2 split in

When West won with heart queen, there were two ways to beat the contract. A spade shift would have guaranteed a trick in each suit for the defense, but this was far from clear. Instead he led the diamond queen and South played low from dummy. Now it was vital for East to play his heart six, an upper that would have promoted a second trump trick for his parties. He discarded the spade jack, and South was in control. He rufted drew trumps, and finested in club queen. He cleared can establishing the last club in h hand, and had 10 tricks: 100 trumps, three clubs, two dis monds and one spade. West thought his partie should have ruffed at the loo trick. East was afraid of expering the trump situation if it partner began with king-que doubleton

In the replay, North raised heart directly to game, After 19 same start to the play some misguessed by putting up the amond king. There was staway to make 10 tricks, but it difficult to find and he failed in a World Cup Giant slalom in Switzerland yesterday.

Dallas 5-Point Favorite To Take Super Bowl

By Bob Oates

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 10.-There are two reasons why Dallas is a 5-point favorite over Denver in the opinion of many of those who have come here for the Super Bowl on Sunday:

• The Cowboys are intimately acquainted with Denver's quarter-back, Craig Morton. They know his strengths and particularly his weaknesses because they used to have him in Dallas. They had him nine years before tracing him off in his prime. The quarterback who replaced event that traditionally consumes first-time visitors. Powerful Pressure him is Roger Staubach, who-among other things-is more mobile. Thus Dallas has an edge

· The Broncos are more likely than the Cowboys to lose their poise in the adventities that are to be expected in a big football game. Worki championship pressure is nothing new to the Cowboys, who were in this event only two winters ego. This is their fourth Super Bowl trip of the 1970s. By contrast, this is the Broncos' first venture into an

at quarterback,

The ferment and tension created by performing for 80 million Americans watching television are beyond the power of most people to imagine.

The Broncos, of course, know all about pressure-filled stadiums. They have one of their own in Denver, but it works to their advantage. Visiting players have repeatedly found that it isn't easy to play sound football in front of 75,000 hostile spectators. The Super Bowl scene is wholly different, most critics believe. One who doesn't is Red Miller, the Denver coach. That talk [about Super Bowl pressure) is just bull, just a bunch of bull," Miller says, his voice rising. "I get a little hot every time I hear it. "I don't buy all that [bowl pressure] mystique," he says. "We're a football team. And we're just going out there to play a football game." Well, maybe. The Dallas coach, Trm Landry, said similar things years ago at his first Super Bowl (where he lost) but he didn't say them with so much feeling. The emotional differences between Landry and Miller provide much of the interest of this sume. They have one thing in common: Both call the plays for their quarterbacks.

An informed minority of those here for Sunday's game believe the prospect is for a scoreless defensive battle. They think it might be 0-0 for much of the game until one team turns the ball over to the other close enough to kick the winning field Defense Is Strong Denver's strength is its explosive defense. The four Bronco linebackers took quick enough to repeatedly catch Tony Dorsettgoing in side or out—and the Bronco pass defense looks like a spare for Staubach Therefore, the Dallas question is whether it can summon the offense to move against such a Defensively, Dallas seems weaker than Denver. The Cowboys probably couldn't handle the Cowboy offense. Nonetheless, they look tough enough to stop the offense they will have to stop HEW has threatened to withhold here, Denver's Many of those looking for a close fight say that the Cowboys can't beat the Broncos but that the Broncos can, no doubt, beat

A minority of coaches, scouts and writers flatly picks Denver, making these points:

• The Cowboys are overrated. They looked better in the playoffs than they are. · Their 1977 record against the American Conference can't encourage the Cowboys, who, in a one-sided game in late November, were stung by Pittsburgh, 28-13. Although Dallas beat Denver last month, 14-6, the opposing cosches approached that game in different ways: The Broncos pulled Morton after three downs, kept Otis Armstrong benched and played much of the time with reserves. The Cowboys went with regulars. Yet in a 60-minute performance with Dallas's first team, Staubach could earn only two touchdowns against Denver's defense. That seemed to be the day's most instructive develop-

Kuhn Explains the Vida Blues

By Red Smith

NEW YORK, Jan. 10 (NYT). -Bowie Kuhn, the tallest and most impeccably tailored commissioner baseball ever has had, has postponed until Jan. i7 a hearing on the sale of Vida filue by the Oakland A's. There have been hints that he might be disposed to approve the transaction if the terms were altered so the Cincinnati Reds gave Charlie Finley less cash than the $1.75 million they agreed to pay him, and made up the difference with players more valuable than Dave Revering, the minor league first baseman whom the Reds included as part payment.

From this, one must infer that be does not intend to approve the deal unless it is rearranged to his liking.

Does this mean, the commis-sioner was asked, that valuable players may no longer be sold for cash? Considerable Concern

"I really have to sit down and hear the arguments in this particular case, he said, "before I make up my mind what my position's going to be on it. But certainly large cash deals are things that are a very con-siderable concern to me, yup." He had been out chopping wood and was sitting home in his

In 1978, Finley sold Blue to the New York Yankees for $1.5 million and Joe Rudi and Rollie Fingers to the Boston Red Sox for $1 million each. Kuhn can-celed the deals, saying they would be bad for the Oakland

"Nor can I persuade myself," he added, "that the spectacle of the Yankees and Red Sox buying contracts of star players in the prime of their careers for cash sums totalling $3.5 million is anything but devastating to Baseball's reputation for inin the game."

By this precedent, Kuhn set himself up as arbiter of all player transactions. Was it good or had for baseball in Minnesota if the Twins sold Bert Blyleven for $300,000? What about the Mets' purging of ingrates named Tom Seaver and Dave Kingman? Hundreds of players have changed hands since June, 1876. Only Charlie Finley's deals have been scuttled at Kuhn's office.

'If you had been commissioner." Kuhn was asked, "would you have disapproved of the following deals: sale of Babe Ruth and the rest of the Red Sox (Ernie Shore, Dutch Leonard, Duffy Lewis, Carl Mays, ard, Duify Lewis, Carl Mays, Wally Schang, Waite Hoyt, Mike McNaily, Harry Hooper, Bullet Joe Bush, Sam James, Deacon Scott, Joe Dugan, Herb Pennock and George Pipgras] by Harry Frazee; the dismantling of two championship clubs by Connie Mack; Clark Griffith's sale of his son-in-law for a quarter-million, which probably was the equivalent of $2 mil-Hon today?"

"Well," Howie said, "when I testified in Charife Finelys lawsuit I was asked about that. I said I wasn't sure what I would have done. I didn't fore close the possibility that I would have done something different from what Judge Landis did." The judge did nothing

"I did say this," Kuhn said. "Before 1965, baseball didn't have the same concern about competitive balance that It does today. In the decade before 1965, baseball had to fight harder to retain its position in the entertainment field and that ability was not belped by the fact that a handful of clubs were dominating the game, particularly the Yankees but also tegrity and to public confidence the Drdgers and a few others. Balaoce a Factor

> "Mere and more the philosopby came to be that we had to do semething to give the tailend teams a chance to compete, and that is why in 1965 we adopted the first free-agent draft. I think that was important in giving baseball a better competitive balance than it had had. The situation back in the cld days was one where Judge Landis and the clubs did not worry as much about campetitive balance."

Competitive balance, it was suggested, was a myth. Since 1965, Oakland, Lcs Angeles, Cin-chnati, Pittsburgh and Baltimore had dominated the play-

"Let me give you another figure, the commissioner said.
"Since we went to divisional play in 1969, 14 cf the 24 clubs have won divisions."

"When you canceled the sale of three players in 1975," Kuhn was reminded, you mentioned the best interests of baseball, you mentioned the game's integrity and the confidence of the fans and shad you deplored seeing rich clubs buying players for those figures."

"What I said was," the commissioner said, "you saw the American League East becoming even stronger.

"Yes, and they have continued to do that by spending even larger sums than they were going to spend for Blue and Rudi and Pingers."

Point Admitted "True enough," Khun said, "but that's under the collective-bargaining agreement." meant the right players have won to become free agents and should we let that situation get worse by permitting large cash

"Has there ever been a sale disapproved that didn't involve Finley?

"In my time, you mean?" Kuhn said. "The only denis I have disapproved are the 1976 deals that Finley made." "A year ago Brad Corbett of Texas said he was ready to give Finley six players and a

Nat West Denies Keegan Is Money in the Bank

Hamburg simply feel to pieces the question.

He had already been saying that he thought, despite his kuxurious Hamburg lifestyle, he would soon be on the move to either Spain or the United States, and his further words over the weekend cannot have done much to increase Hamburg's faith, or to mitigate the disciplinary committee's punishment: 'T'd do the same again in similar circumstances," said the unrepentant superstar. Whether or not the denials of the National Westminster prove factual, there is no doubt that Keegan will shortly be on the move, or that his destination is the United States. And no doubt, also, that even the Bank of England soccer club is unable to compete financially for star players who migrate.

The controversial Health, Education and Welfare Department regulations challenged by the National Collegiate Athletic Association were drawn up in 1975 to implement Title IX of the education amendments of 1972. In effect they prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex in any educa-other rights and opportunities that have long been available to make athletes. Following sometimes impassioned debates, members of the Association for Intercollegiate Athietics for Women voted on recruiting and financial matters that have traditionally been a source of strife in the 5-year-old organization The group's president, Judith Holland, said the convention's votes "are a clear expression of the feeling of the association to not discriminate against women

Elfin Chronicler Catches Mood of Changing Spain

By James M. Markham

MADRID (NYT).—Spain's transition from dictatorship to democracy has found an elfin chronicler, a cartoonist named Peridis, who has gently reduced politicians from loftiness to human scale.

The Spanish tradition in general has been one of black humor," observed the baldish, black-bearded Peridis, whose real name is José Maria Perez. "If the humor of England is English and we all know what that is-the humor of Spain is black But I think it has been the strength of my drawing that I have not meant to do harm to anyone."

In a culture that ence seemed fatally inclined to somberness. confrontation and violence. Peridis has caught the rather special peculiarity of the political moment: a rare willingness in many quarters to maintain a constructive dialogue. It is a tribute to his puckish neutrality that his principal victims—from Premier Adolfo Suarez to Santiago Carrillo, leader of the Communist party-have contributed prefaces to his first published collection of cartions, entitled "Peridis's Little Political Animals: The Year of the Transition."

The handsome 45-year-old Premier, who is regularly drawn ensconced on B tail Corintilian column surrounded by petitioners, contributed two prefaces, each addressed to himself—one "Outside the Column, From Reality," the other "On Top of the Column, From Fantasy."

Real Suarez

"When you look at the work of Peridis," the real Adolfo Sugrez warns the unreal, "do not succumb to the temptation to think that you have come out well or badly. Peridis is not a writer or a comic-strip artist; he is almost a philosopher." Suarez's inseparable cartoon servitor is Interior Minister Rodolfo Martin Villa, pictured as a little boy with a peaked Prussian helmet who passes through the sequences hollering

Two of cartoonist Peridis's "political animals" in recent issue of the Madrid daily El Pais.

"Order!" During the confused vote-counting that followed the election last June, Peridis added a bubbling pot to the interior minister's head—the hoary Spanish symbol of votes being cooked up for the winning side.

"What are you bringing me, Rodolfo?" the Premier asks the pot-bedecked interior minister, who presents a chair at the foot of the column. "Another seat for Madrid," answers the minister. "Where did you get it for me?" Suarez inquires. "You do not ask about such things," is the reply from the man who counted the votes.

One of Peridis's favorite characters is Carrillo, secretarygeneral of the Communists, a wrinkled, cigarette-puffing gnome who is usually waist-high in a manhola: a double-edged symbol of the party's recent emergence from clandestinity and of suspicions that it still keeps part of itself hidden.

The legalization of the party last April set off an angry reaction from the conservative hierarchy of the army, inspiring one of Peridis's rare cartoons touching the sensitive military issue. "About face!" shouts an unseen figure. Carrillo dashes expertly for his manhola and is followed nell-mell by all of Spain's political figures, including the liberal Cardinal Enrique Vicente Tarancon. The last one in is Suares, who is told:
"Turn off the lights and let's get out of here." Peridis explained: "This was to show that democracy is indivisible."

Today, though, Carrillo is a picture of respectability, having accepted the monarchy and cultivated good relations with practicing Roman Catholics. Content in his manhole, with his hands plously crossed over his chest, he sports a crown: a cross and the flag of the monarchy.

The cartoonist's rare representations of King Juan Carlos -it is against the law to make light of the army or the monarchy-show him seated with the look of bottomless melancholy that seems to burden him in real life. In one wordless series, a weak, grateful smile crosses the royal countenance as the base—the popular support—of his throne widens. "Now, in Spain, everything is changing," said Peridis, "and people need something that is not changing, and that is the monarchy. If the King moved or gesticulated, he would not be

The King-or part of him-made a more active appearance in a cartoon three days before the June election with Premier Suarez, who was first named by the monarch and assures the public that he does not intend to stay in office unless he has "sufficient support to govern effectively." A huge, undoubtedly kingly finger appears from on high and steadies the Premier's Himself inclined to the center-left of things, Peridis is by local journalistic standards gentle with rightists. Manuel Fraga Iribarne, chief of the rightist Popular Alliance, contributed a preface to the book though he is often pictured as two slightly schizophrenic figures who debate between authoritarian and democratic selves. When Fraga Iribarne put together the Popular Alliance with six former Franco ministers, Peridis immortalized them in the style of Mount Rushmore as crusty faces making up the monumental Valley of the Fallen, the memorial to the Spanish Civil War where the dictator is buried.

Soccer Stars

As a youth, Peridis, now 36, drew caricatures of soccer stars—the ersatz politicians of the Franco era—and after studying architecture in Madrid began lampooning such relatively safe targets as Henry Kissinger and Gerald Ford. It was only after King Juan Carlos began dismantling the Franco state two years ago that the cartoonist began turning his wit on his fellow countrymen. Now he appears daily in El Pais of Madrid as well as in the weekly Cuadernos Para el Dialogo.

"We have already attained 90 per cent of the liberty of the rest of the West," said the cartoonist, pondering the enormous distance covered in only two years. "I do not think that in France or Italy there is much more freedom than we have here. And I am totally optimistic about the future, for reasons of the law of averages: For once things have to come out well

PEOPLE: Britt Ekland Denies Accord With Stewart

Britt Ekland, former girl friend of singer Red Stewart, has denied through her lawyers in Los Angeles that a settlement had been reached in her $23million suit against the rock star but admitted that an agreement was close. Stewart had said in London that the legal battle with Miss Ekland was over and that a settlement, which did not include a monetary award, had been concluded. Miss Ekland's lawyer, Mason Rose, said, "We are very close. But there are still some points which need to be resolved, and if they are not resolved, there will be no settlement." Miss Ekland filed a civil suit against Stewart last August, two days after he walked out of the villa they were sharing. She claimed that she had helped promote his career and charged fraud and deceit in their relationship. Rose said that Stewart's lawyers were anxious that a settlement be reached this week. "It is possible that it will be this week. Things are moving right along," the lawyer said.

ONDON INYTI.-Arthur's, a gentlemen's club established In the early 1800s, hesitantly installed an automatic elevator about 1922. During one of its first runs, on a quiet Sunday morning, three members were stuck between floors for several hours and were almost asphyxiated for lack of ventilation. One of their fellow members sald afterward, "Serve 'em damned well right for shoving in such newlangled contraptions." The gentleman's suspicion was probably justified. New ideas and newlangled contraptions, from socialism to the automobile, have done in Arthur's and most of the old clubs in London, once the club capital of the world. More are merging or going out of business every year, and the few left are being forced to take such measures as catering noisy cocktall parties or admitting women. A few clubs, bowing to the new female pressure, have even been compelled to keep fresh flowers in the hall.

The changes are greeted with indignation, but most leaders of the clubs are convinced that they must bend or go bust, Arthur's came to terms with the automatic elevator, but less than 20 years later succumbed to subtler menaces—social and economic "leveling," inflation, rising labor and maintenance costs and, most notably, the change in members' habits brought on by the internal combustion engine.

"Seventy years ago a member was either in the country or in London," the late Sir Charles Petrie wrote in his history of the Carlton Club in 1972. 'If he was in the country, he did not use the club; if he was in London, he probably spent a large portion of his time there."

With the coming of the automohlie, he wrote, a gentleman might live 40 miles from the city, visit his club only long enough for a quick lunch during the week and never come at all on a good bit of grumbling and about $275 s year in the better

The death of Arthur's in 1940 was part of the beginning of the downward trend. Since World War II, and especially during the last few years, London has lost three or four clubs a year.

The number of clubs "of real consequence" has dwindled from about 80 to about 40 during the last 30 years. Only about a dozen of those remaining are what one authority calls "serious social clubs," meaning those at the level of White's, Boodles and the Athenaeum in snoh appeal.

During the last two years five clubs of some substance—St, James's, the Constitutional, the Devonshire, the Junior Carlton and the Canning-have had to merge with other clubs to meet their hills.

The Royal Automobile Club is said to be in "great trouble." The Reform, from which Philess Fogg began his 80-day trip around the world, has just come through a difficult period.

Virtually all, including the most exclusive, have seen their memberships decline either in number or in what the older gentlemen call "quality." People are being elected to membership who would fore World War II, and not at all before World War L Even doctors and lawyers are being taken into the better clubs now.

"Before the war," Robin Mc-Douall, the secretary of the Carlton, said in a recent interview, probably would not elect a doctor hecause he might know something about your insides."

Lawyers were considered risky for similar reasons. Too many had handled members' wills and legal difficulties. If the old-timers thought it unwise to let in doctors and lawyers, imagine how they must have felt when the first women were admitted, Some, like White's, still will not allow women inside the premises, much less admit them to membership. But a fair number have begun to accept have permitted women voting rights and the full run of the premises beyond the first floor. Those that have extended voting rights have come to regret it, Mr. McDouall said.

"They vote for all kinds of tire-

The Cariton got its first female member because of an unprecedented political event. The club was founded in 1832 by leaders of the Conservative party, and it had permitted membership only to men and Tories When Margaret Thatcher in 1975 became the first woman to head the Conservative party, the Carlton manfully faced up to it and let her into the club, They do not let her vote, though. Besides admitting women, part-ly in recognition that husbands and wives spend more time together now than formerly, the clubs have begun to try various devices to entice members to use the facilities,

They encourage members to have their private parties at the club instead of at home or in a hotel, Mrs. Thatcher has had several parties, including one for her silver wedding anniversary, at the Carlton. They invite good speakers for lunch. Some waive or reduce entrance fees for interesting young men who might want to join. They spruce up their bedrooms a large proportion of all mem-bers, to stay at the club instead

The enticements pay off, at least on the balance sheets. Many members do not like what they have done to the peace of the smoking rooms, however, "Some are rather bored at coming in and finding that their favorite room has been taken over by a party with 200 people milling around," Mr. McDouall Perhaps the most drastic measure a tottering club can take is to merge with another. The members of neither chib like it much, but the weak one gains continuity, albeit diluted, and the stronger gains resources. A younger, less prestigious called the Junior Carlton was joined with the Carlton this month. The Carlton had about 1,000 members and the Junior Carlton about 1,700, including a number of "lady associates," mostly wives and daughters of Some Carlton members are grumbling about the crowding and the additional women, but the leaders take a realistic view. The club's chairman, former millan, told Mr. McDouall after the merger, "I think this given us 10 years of life."

Italian Christian Democrats Bitterly Split on Communists

ROME, Jan. 11 (UPI).—The Communist party's drive to be in-cluded in Premier Giulio Andreotti's government and gain direct soverning power in the next cabinet opened bitter splits today in the ruling Christian Democratic party. As Mr. Andreotti's party directorate met to consider its response to Communist demands for more say in governing Italy, deputies, of the Christian Democratic party's 262 representatives in the lower house of Parliament, signed a letter rejecting any accord with the Communists.

The dispute centered on a compromise proposal that would allow the Communists to vote with the governing majority in Parliament but would not give Communists seats in the cabinet.

A faction led by party secretary Benigno Zaccagnini and former Premier Aldo Moro was leaning toward an accommodation with the Communists, politicians said. Mr. Andreotti, with the en-couragement of U.S. officials in Washington and Rome, has so far rejected any compromise and

Sinai Issue Dominates Cairo Talk With Israel

CAIRO, Jan. 11.—The Egyptian and Israeli defense ministers declared widely divergent views today on a with drawa! from the Sinai Peninsula.

Israeli Gen. Ezer Weizman urged the continued maintenance of Jewish seltlements as part of a peace agreement guaranteeing upen boundaries and waterways between the two countries, Egypt's Gen. Mohammed Gamasy demanded intal evacuation of the Sinal, including the liquidation of settlements.

The two ministers were addressing the opening 90-minute session of as 16-man joint multary committee that met to discuss the unlitary aspects of Egyptian-Israeli peace. Gen. Weizman was the first to speak. Gen. Weizman, who met earlier in the day with Exyptian President Anward Sadat in Aswan, suggested a mutual reduction of troops and the establishment on a wide demilitarized zone on the Egyptian side of the border. David Kolilz, spokesman for the Israell delegation, and d the friendly... There are two posi-tions. Each side is starting with its own position but no conclusions were made today."

The Israeli positions covered these five points: Phased withdrawal of Is-

 Maintenance of Israell settiements and the determination of their status.

• Status of Israeli airfields to the Sinai

Officials said that the Israeli demand for free waterways refer-red to the Tiran Straits, the southern entrance to the Agaba Gulf, whose cicsure by Egypt triggered the 1967 war.

Egypt is agreeable to the Israell demand and is ready to have international troops stationed at Sharm of Sheikh, the fortress at the southern tip of Sinal, provid ed no Israeli forces are included Demilitarized Zones

Officials said that Egypt is elso ready for the establishment of demilitarized zones along both gides of the border, as opposed to Gen. Weizman's demand for a buffer zone along the Egyptian side only.

Asked about reports that Egypt wants withdrawal from the Sinal to be completed within 10 months. Gen. Weizman said earlier today, The Israeli plan calls for stages of three in five years."
It was learned that the invitation to Gen. Weizman to visit Mr. Sadat in Aswan before the talks began was made at Mr. Sadat's initiative and was seen here as a hopeful sign that Mr. Sadat did not want the talks to get bogged down n the settlements issue, which as so dominated the past weeks.

Originally, Israel wanted the settlements issue to be discussed at the political committee meet ings that begin in Jerusalem next week but the Egyptians inssted that the matter be raised in the military committee meetings.

Defense Problems Before he left for Egypt this morning, Gen. Weizman held an airport press conference at which he said that the first thing on the agenda would be that "we ahall present to our Egyptian colleagues what we consider the general threat to the state of Israel defensewise—north, east, west and south. After that the agenda is not very clear but it is most likely and logical that we shall plunge directly into defense problems the way we see it and the way they see lt."

Gen. Weizman admitted that the issue of the settlements "looks like a critical one." But he etressed that, when two nations such as Israel and Egypt meet for talks after so many years of bloodshed.

It was not immediately known whether the leaders had cracked the deadlock over the central issue of how many seats whites should hold and what the power they should wield in a proposed new black dominated legislature. The Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, the only one of the three leaders who spoke to newsmen after the meeting, said simply: "We are

S. Africa Nonwhites Open Unity Talk

(AP).—The leader of South Africa's Zulus, the largest and most powerful tribe in this racially divided nation, opened unprecedented unity talks today with mixed-race and Asian leaders.

Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, chief minister of the kwaZulu Homeiand, called for an alliance of nonwhite groups after the country's whites voted overwhelming-ly in favor of the ruling National party in Nov. 30 elections.

A key aid to Chief Buthelexi S. Bengu, told a convention of the Colored (mixed race) Labor party on Dec. 28: "We have no choice but to team up. After the white solidarity exercise in the white election, we ought to show our solidarity in our repection of apartheid" In his opening address to the sting, Chief Buthelezi declar-

The meeting was even as a political development that could draw angry reaction from the government. An alliance of the Zulus, Asians and coloreds would unite about 8.6 million nonwhites nearly twice the 4.4 million whites in South Africa.

Jimmy Kruger, the minister of justice and police, warned in November of a "bloodbath" if Chief Buthelezi tried to extend membership in his Zuln-based Inkatha organization to non-Zulus: South African laws forbid any interracial political parties.

Existing Parties But Chief Buthelezi claimed that he was forming an alitance of existing parties, not expanding his own. He revived Inkatha, the Zulu Cultural Liberation Move-ment, in 1975 and has forged it into an organization dedicated to peaceful black liberation. Other tribal groups among the 19 million blacks in South Africa have been hesitant to join, fearing Zulu domination.

The talks followed a recent decision by the Colored Labor party, to align itself with Inkatha. Central to the organization's philosophy is to bring all races to the negotiating table to

Dr. Luther Terry, the surgeon general in 1964, said that his report has dissuaded 20 million or more Americans from smoking. Thirty million Americans have stopped smoking since 1964, but if earlier trends had continued, 75 million Americans would be smoking today, he said.

Mr. Califano said that his program would include:

• Education campaigns. He is calling for increased broadcasts of anti-smoking announcements, comprehensive anti-smoking programs in local schools and intensive programs targeted toward youths and high-risk groups, such is pregnant women.

· Increased anti-smoking regulations. He said that, as of today. HEW buildings will limit smoking to designated areas and separate smokers from nonsmokers where practical. Similar policies are being proposed to the nation's 50 largest corporations and for the federal government's 10,000

• Anti-smoking incentives. He said that a task force will be formed with the Treasury Department to consider increasing the federal excise tax on cigarettes and a graduated tax according to nicotine, tar and carbon monox-ide content. He also urged health, fire, life and other types of insurers to offer special premium discounts to nonsmokers.

 Expanded research on the links between smoking and health. Toward that end, he asked the surgeon general to prepare comprehensive report for publication next year.

In offering his program, Mr. Califano said that smoking costs the nation an estimated $17 billion to $25 billion a year in health care and lost productivity, vages and absenteelsm.

U.S. Agency Suspects Exxon Of Overcharges in Oil Sales

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12 AP. -The Department of Energy said today that Exxon, the nation's largest petroleum producer, may have violated federal price celllngs and overcharged the public about $183.3 million for crude

A spokesman lor Exxou immediately denied that the company overcharged for its oil or violated the federal price ceiling regulations. He said the company would contest the allegations.

The department said it issued notice of probable violation to Exxon after its audit of the company turned up the possible violations. The audit was started after the department issued a similar notice involving alleged overcharges of $70.8 million on Dec. 27. Thus, Ecxon now is suspected by the department of having overcharged almost quarter of a billion dollars.

Past Prodoction

An Exxon spokesman, Charles Rowden, said in a statement from Houston that the department was trying to apply federal price ceilings retroactively to Exxon's past oil production.

The dispute involves production from a number of leased areas in the "Howkins field" of Wood County, Texas, and an interpretation of the difference hetween "old" and "new" oll produced from the same field.

Under the federal regulations. old oil was allowed a price ceiling of $5.25 a barrel while new oil could claim prices of up to $11.29 a barrel.

In determining whether pro-duction from an existing oil field was old or new off, the government decided that the amount of oil produced by the field in the past would be the cutoff point. All production up to that

Bringing the Dollar War Home

Early this month, the Carter administration abandoned its "benign neglect" of the dollar. Under pressure both from West European governments and Wall Street to stabilize exchange rates, the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board announced their joint intention to Intervene in foreign currency markets in the dollar's defense. Armed with a fresh line of foreign credit the Fed propped up its sagging value with respect to the German mark and Swiss franc by huying dollars.

These brief forays into currency markets had less than the desired effect, however. Ourrency traders demanded greater proof of the American commitment to a atrong currency. The Treasury, rejuctant to sacrifice domestic economic objectives to the strong dollar, demurred. But the conservative majority of the Federal Reserve governors, far more concerned about exchange rate instability, offered the traders another bone. The Fed increased the interest rate it charges on loans to private banks and took direct action to reduce the money aupply. Tegether, these moves have raised the interest return available to all lenders and made dollar investments more attractive to foreignera.

The new show of resolve is good news for those preoccupied with the aagging dollar. But for the rest of us, more concerned about emplorment and economic growth, the Fed'a strategy is disquieting. The decision to place a higher priority on exchange rates than on domestic economic recovery is an unwelcome precedent.

Though regrettable, the Federal Reserve approach is understandable. If the value of the dollar is to be defended without massive intervention in currency markets, corporations and wealthy investors must be persuaded to park their spare capital in dollar securities. The chance, now offered by the Fed, to earn an extra point of interest can be a powerful attraction to companies holding billions in cash.

But, unfortunately, higher interest rates for foreign lenders also mean higher rates for domestic borrowers. Stiff interest charges will dim the already flagging corporate enthusiasm for expanding plants—and thos creating jobs. Equally serious, high interest rates on government securities tend to lure deposits away from savings accounts, thereby choking off funds available for one major sector of the economy, housing construction. In essence, the Fed is gambling that tight credit will soothe the dollar's international critics without severely damaging the Amerzan economy.

Is there no way to shore up the dollar abroad without risking jobs and profits at bome? Credit policy is the only lever the Fed has on the economy. But a number of more constructive alternatives are available to the White House.

• Lean on the West Germans. It is more than semantics to recast the problem of the dollar's weakness as the problem of the German mark's strength. West Germany's sluggish economy has, paradoxically, attracted conservative international investors who care not a whit about Germany's high unemployment and care very much about that country's high interest rates, low inflation and lat foreign trade surpluses. If Bonn could be persuaded to bolster the nation's own growth rate, the relative appeal of the mark would diminish, leaving investors with no place to turn but Wall Street. German growth would also help pull Europe out of its long economic slump, and thereby increase demand for American goods. Such a boost for exports would shrink the United States's $30-billion trade deficit and ease investor fears about the stability of tha American economy.

 Lean on Congress. Both the symbolism of American dependence on Arab energy and the reality of huge cash flows to pay our all import bill have weakened the dollar. The energy plan, now trapped in congressional conference committee, wouldn't end our derendence. But it would keep that dependence from growing, and show the world that Americans are willing to sacrifice for energy conservation. Passage of the energy bill might thus go a long way in restoring confidence in the dollar.

• Lean on tax policy. Most of the damage that tight credit can do can be undone by a fiscal policy aimed at increasing business investment incentives and consumer power. Business, reluctant to absorb high interest costs, could be coaxed into investments by the promise of investment tax credits and lower corporate income tax rates. Consumers, loath to bear higher monthly interest charges, could still be lured into car and home purchases by increasing the amount left in their pay envelopes after taxes. A $25-billion, $30-billion tax cut is stready in the works. Should the Fed follow through on its tight money game plan, there is every reason to consider a much larger tax cut this spring.

To date skirmishes over the dollar have been confined to international financial markets. The Fed's credit policies however, promise to bring the dollar war home to the American people. It is up to Congress, the President, and most of all, our German allies, to keen that from happening.

THE NEW YORK TIMES.

A Boost for Chile's Junta

Here is an instructive sequence for you: In three successive years while the junta in Chile tightened its grip, the United Nations General Assembly condemned it. In the fourth year, just completed, the junta began loosening its grip, and the Assembly, ever loyal to the rituals of the left, still condemned it. The United States, for the first time, joined the pack. An infuriated (and clever) President Pinochet promptly called a snap plebiscite to capitalize on his people'a aroused disgust. In their first chance to vote in four years. Chileans were asked "in the face of international aggression" to support President Pinochet and "reaffirm" the legitimacy of his regime. They did so, 3 to 1. At once he announced he would hold no more elections for 10 years.

Now, aome comfort is being drawn from the fact that in the 13-day campaign for the plehiscite, the junta permitted limited, but what was for it unprecedented, latitude to its opponents. And those who see internal dissension as the junta's likeliest undoing note with satisfaction that the three other leaders of the junta objected to the way the plehiatite was staged. Actually, however, the plehiscite played right into President Pinochet's handa. He converted the nationalism stirred by the United Nationa unsophisticated rebuke into personal political coin. His critics' contention that the plebiscite was largely a government-manipulated exercise has had to vie against the junta's claim that the vote represented a mandate for its emphasis on stability and order. The United States, which halted arms salea and development support last year and thereby yielded the chance to use the annual negotiations on these items for political leverage. had to content itself with complaining that the plebiscite was unfair.

This is all a plty. As relieved as many Chileans may he to leave behind the chaos of the last Allende days, we cannot believe they wholeheartedly embrace a regime that has brought great suffering on the people and alienated Chile from many of its traditional friends. If the junta has taken some tentative modarate steps in the last year, It still enforces a harsh state of siege. Indeed, it seems not only harsh hut also gratultous. President Pinochet may now be tempted to interpret the plebiscite in the spirit of his recent boast-"my pants are wired on with steel"-and to crack down harder. But by his own logic he could just as well conclude that his people's loyalty permits him to ignore the United Nations and to continue the relaxation begun last

Cambodia-Vietnam Conflict

Few tears will be spilled in the West over the sight of those exceptionally hrutal masters of Cambodia, the Khmer Rouge, having to fight for survival against an invasion launched by their Vietnamese neighbors.

Even so, it is doubtful whether we should wish the invaders total victory. An Indochina completely dominated by the heirs of Ho Chi Minh would represent a far greater threat to the non-Communist states in the area, and especially to Thailand, than the present bitter and muddled rivairy.

The delay in speaking out here as part of President Carter's "human rights" policy is caused primarily by the difficulty in verifying the accuracy of the out of Phnom Penh, Egypt is the only non-Communist country that has diplomatic relations with Cambodia, and its officials are virtually under house

Even the Communist diplomats in the Cambodian capital from China, Cuba, North Korea, Laos, Albania, Romania, Vietnam and Yugoslavia are restricted to their own embassies. Their food and essential supplies are delivered to them by the Cambodian Foreign Office. Accordingly, most of the information comes from refugees who happen to escape from Cambodis into the Gulf of Stam in the south or into Theiland on the north and west.

This "murder of a gentle land" raises some fundamental questions for the community of nations and for the United Nations, that has tried so hard to organize public opinion against genocide.

Difficult Questions

Can nothing be done by the so-called "great nations" at least to investigate the reports of such human suffering? Do the sov-ereign rights of national states include the power to treat or dispose of their people in any way their temporary rulers decide? And if they cannot investigate or interfere with human brutality, can't they at least cry out egainst it? These are the questions now under discussion here in Washington.

A distinction should be made here between the Cambodian government's apparent effort to wipe out those of its own people who have opposed its revolutionary policies, and the border clashes between Cambodian and Victnamese troops.

The diplomatic reports coming here on the border war are less ominous. In fact, they tend to dispute the notion, put forward

Human Issue.

The immediate issue is not strategic but human, and this raises the question of what the Chinese leaders in Peking will do, if anything, to help. They have hundreds of "technicians" and "advisers" in Cambodia who, unlike their diplomats in the capital of Phnom Penh, are not restricted to a single place but are free to move around

More than any other foreigners, the Chinese are in tha position to know tha facts, and they represent the only country that has any leverage on the Cambodians. The French, who have historic ties to Cambodia, have done their best to intervene without success. The British have debated the issues in Parliament and tried through their missions in many capitals to persuade Cambodian diplomate to moderate their government's policies. but the most hopeful point of restraint is Peking.

Fortunately, there will be a major debate on human rights at the United Nations in Nev York next month, and this will be an interesting test of the permanent members of the UN Security Council: The United States, the Soviet Union, China, Britain and France.

It was assumed, or at least hoped, when the United Nations Charter was signed at San Fran-cisco in 1945, that these five nations would be able to agree on how to keep the peace in the world, or if they couldn't do that at least that they would combine together to avoid excessive human suffering that did not interfere with their separate national amhitions.

The truth is, and not surprisingly, that they haven't been thinking much about Cambodia at all. They have been worrying, naturally, about their own concerns: inflation, unemployment the Middle East, the belance of

Dramatic Moves

Sadat's great quality is the capacity for sweeping dramatic moves that transform historic perspectives. He showed it first in 1972 by unflaterally expelling most Soviet advisers from Egypt. Again in 1973 when he launched the October war. Most recently with the visit to Jerusalem in November.

Sadat has a weakness for the histrionic. He cannot resist the starring role. He loves posturing before the television cameras. It is a rare day when he does not give an interview to some newspaper or magazine, and, like most

A Man's Mania for Minuteness Sells for $256,500 in London

By Susan Heller Anderson

ONDON, Jan. 11 (NYT).-An exquisite example of one man's manis for minuteness went on the block at Christie's here. Titania's Palace, surely one of the most elaborate dollhouses, with 16 rooms lavishly furnished and embellished with works of art, was the labor of love of Sir Nevile Wilkinson, who began it in 1907 for his daughter. It eventually took him 15 years to build the Palladian confection

At the suction, which took one and a half minutes, Spink and Son Ltd., a leading art dealer, paid £135,000 ($256,500), nearly four times the price it fetched 10 years ago when Sir Nevile's daughter, Guendolen, for whom the dollhouse was intended, sold it at Christie's, Spink's, acting on behalf of an anonymous business organisation, would reveal only that the dollhouse would remain in Europe and be "displayed for the delight of children," according to a spokesman. During the set 10 years it has been exhibited commercially with people pay-ing admission to see it.

the project snowballed.
Titania, queen of the fairies in Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," must have been thrilled with her new digs. It is immense, 116 inches long. 90 inches wide and, in most places, 30 inches high.

Sir Nevile enlisted the aid of friends and the fashionable ar-chitect Sid Edwin Lutyens, and designed a beliry surmounting the chapel, which adds another 55 inches to the height at one end. The palace is mounted on a waisthigh platform and all rooms are electrically lighted.

The facades were not completed during Sir Nevile's lifetime and the palace has exterior mahogany walls only on the short sides. The columns and the first-floor Corinthian ones have gilt capitals. It took Christie's five full days to reconstruct the dollhouse. which had been dismantled for

The catalogue explains that the absence of doors is due to the fact that fairies fly in through the windows.

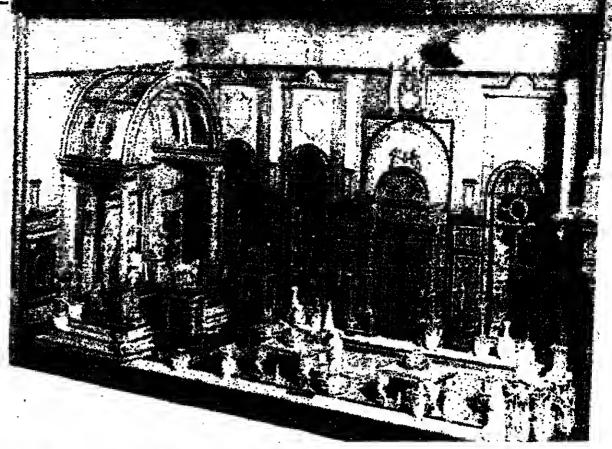

Beginning at the most elaborate short side of the house, three rooms comprise the impressive the Hall of the Guilds, the Hall of the Fniry Kiss and the chapel. The first is festooned with miniature banners which hang from a shell-encrusted ceiling. A gold fountain, inlaid with dismonds, spouts water. There is an exculsite 3-inch silver casket painted with the Portrait of Madame de Sévigné. The Hall of the Fatry Kiss has a walnut staircase decorated with silver figures and wrought metal grills. There is an agate seal mounted in gold on a rock crystal base, a pair of silver Chinese lanterns given by Queen Mary and a tiny ivory sculpture of Fiora, holding a basket of flowers. A bronze Nepalese god is mounted on a marble stand supported by four ivory elephants. A pair of Chinese porcelain vases are displayed on lapis-lamili pedestals and there is a celadon jadepierced plaque firescreen.

The most extraordinary piece is a Louis-Philippe ormolu table, 4and-a-half inches high, with cab-riole legs, holding a casket containing a miniature necklace of the Grand Cross of the Fairy Kiss, the casket surmounted by a gold crown.

The apartments of Titania, Oberon, the King of the Pairies, and the other fairies which line one long side are less palatial but still crammed with captivating objects. The floor of Titania's boudoir is inlaid with mother-ofpearl and the ceiling copled from the Holbein original in St. James's Palace. Titania's work table contains tiny paintbrushes and a with Chippendale-style chairs and there are delicate, tiny silver candlesticks and model ships. Two miniature showcases display the fairles' golden knickknacks. The gold bicycle in the nu sery has wheels set with cabochon sapphires and there are tiny jack-in-the-boxes in gold and silver along with a miniature copy of another delihouse built by Sir Nevile in his spare time.

Malachite Chinese hons flank the throne.

First Brezhnev Biography In English Goes on Sale

By Arthur Gavshon

ONDON, Jan. 11 (AP).—The nist party's Central Committee first authorized biography in English of Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev went on sale today in British bookstores. It tells little about the Soviet leader's life that was not already known, but there are lots of pictures.

Publisher Robert Maxwell of Pergamon Press and Soviet Am-bassador Nikolni Lunkov launched the profusely illustrated 60,-000-word book, "Brezhnev-A Short Biography," at a crowded reception last night at the Soviet Embassy. It will be published in the United States in mid-Febru-

The book, priced at $10, contains a foreword written four months ago by Mr. Brezhnev saying that the English version is an updated translation of the biography published in Moscow in 1976 to mark his 70th birthday.

Mr. Maxwell, a native of Czechoslovakia and former Labor member of the House of Commons said that it is the first of a series that will include President Carter. Chinese Communist party Chairman Hua Kuo-feng and UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldbelm. He said that he expects to arrange for distribution of a Russian-language edition of Mr Carter's biography in the Soviet

The blography of the Soviet leader was written jointly by members of the Soviet Commuand by the Institute of Marxism-Leninism, according to the title page. The tone is echoed by the book jacket, which describes Mr. Brezhnev as "soldier, party worker and statesman" who rose "from ordinary steelworker to supreme leadership of the Soviet Union."

The book speaks of "the titanic work of the party the Central Committee and tts Polithuro headed by Brezhnev." It says that Mr. Brezhnev's election as general secretary of the party was "more than a mere acknowledgment of his outstanding personal qualities-it was also an expression of approval and support of Leninist policy," which it said he followed scrupulously.

The book omits all mention the controversial Brezhnev Doctrine proclaiming the duty and right of the Soviet government and other Communist regimes to intervene on behalf of Communist governments in other countries.

There also is no mention of Mr Brezhnev's personal role in the 1968 Soviet iuvasion of Czechoslovakia, the first application of the Brezhnev Doctrine But it speaks of the "perils that menaced the Czechoslovak Socialist system" and says that the Soviet Union and four other Eastern European countries intervened to save "the lives of thousands of people" and to ensure peace in Czecbosłovakia.

FASHION IN PARIS

The Commercial Side of the Underground

By Hebe Dorsey

PARIS, Jan. 11 (IHT).—Underground fashion is alive in Paris. The French call it retro or fripes. Both mean secondhand

The first big-time commercial reak came from the Galeries Lafayette department store, which recently opened a fripes corner in its Rayon Vingt Ans department. According to the professional monthly GAP, which has an extensive study on retro fashion in its current issue, the reason for that ever-growing fad is that those clothes, unlike what is on the mass market today, have style. GAP analyzed all sides of the situation and reported on the major sources of retro fashion in

The fad for fripes started with young, imaginative people without much money browsing at the Fles Market looking for bargains. The most popular hangout is the Marché d'Aligre, where the bestknown booth is that of Marguerite -a little old lady who has specialized in mourning clothes for 30 Years.

Widely Followed .

She has been widely followed by young merchants, who, much like Flea Market furniture dealers who keep regular stores on the side during weekdays, also have small boutiques somewhere in Paris where the sale goes on all the Many boutloves, specializing in retro, have also opened, mostly on the Left Bank, and they, too, often become steady clients of the fles markets. There, clothes are generally in better shape, clean and pressed, and, consequently, more expensive. Many of those objects, halfway between junk and antiques.

La Russolière, on the Rue Verneuil, sells not only fripes (with the accent on broad-shouldered dresses from the '50s) hut also old combs, cigarette holders or baby hairpins (that are worn on lapels). On the Rue du Roule, at Rag Time, Françoise Auguet often lends clothes to movie directors. She points out that fripes have a

In his garage one day six years ago, Mr. Brown was putting together an electric guitar when he tangeld some wires. He recalled yesterday that he saw rats seattering. He recrossed the wires and the rodents ran again.

Mr. Brown, 51, built what he called a rat repellant box and since then, 18,000 have been produced in Los Angeles and Tijuana,

A chicken farmer north of San Diego, about 50 miles west of Hipass, bought the first one when about 10,000 mice were bothering the chickens every night. It cleared his place in four or five days," Mr. Brown said recently ordered 300 to kill cockroaches in food stores in Caracas, and 1,000 were sent to Spanish granaries in Barcelona, Mr. Brown plans to fly to Brooklyn next Tuesday to talk to U.S. Housing and Urban Development Department officials about placing 9,000 units in low-rental apartments. "We flew to Hawaii and discovered the antennae on roaches just fold up when they hear itthey're on their backs, out of touch, without any balance," said Mr. Brown.

Mr. Brown; a native of Fairmont. Minn., said that the frequency is "over a million cycles a second." The human ear can hear up to about 20,000 cycles. Mr. Brown said the net profits of his Amigo Ecology Corp. were about $800,000 last year and the gross "about a million and a half." "A millionaire? I guess I am." Mr. Brown said. Mr. Brown said that he makes certain dress with thick stockings and flat heels whereas an older woman will turn tt into something sexy or staid, just by changing the At Galeries Lafayette, the fripes experience has been a success so far with 3,000 shirts sold in one montb. The clothes there are left deliberately in an "as is" statethat is, crumpled and stacked up rather than neatly arranged, to keep the flea-market atmosphere. By February, the store is going to add another tripes department. with sexy old dresses imported from Italy.

Its stock so far comes from the United States, and mainly from Chamar, which is the largest importer of American secondhand clothes. Chamar, which also exports to the EEC countries, notes that the flea-market clientele is now receding in favor of the boutiques. Whereas markets were his only outlet 10 years ago, now boutiques account for 60 per cent of his sales.

According to Ginette Sainderichain. GAP's editor, another reason for the increasing success of jripes is that young anti-establishment people like to express their personalities through old clothes. They also like the idea that they are avoiding the commercial networks-without realizing that they are, in fact, being exploited by astute merchants who know quite well on which side their bread is buttered.

U.K. Car Sales Up 3%

Passenger car sales in Britain last year rose 3 per cent to their highest level in four years, but imports accounted for all of the advance as poor industrial relatins cost U.K.-based automakers an estimated 400,000 cars of lost production. New car registrations rose to 1.32 million units from 1.29 million in 1976 and were the highest since 1973 when a record 1.66 million cars were sold. Imports increased their market penetration to a new high of 45.4 per cent of total sales from 38 per cent a year earlier. Sales of U.K.-assembled cars fell 9.4 per cent to 722,947 units, the lowest ligure in more than 10 years. Ford Motor, relying on Buropean af-filiates to supply inventory, was the top seller —as well as the leading importer—with sales of 340,319 cars last year, giving it a 25.7-per-cent market share. British Leyland in second place accounted for 24.3 per cent of the market, Sales of Japanese cars rose 15.7 per cent to 140,415 units, giving them a 10.6-per-cent share of the market compared to 9.4 per cent a year earlier. This gain was described as "significant" by a man for the auto trade federation in light of earlier Japanese promises that no significant rise in the market share was expected for 1977.

The U.K. auto federation is going to Tokyo next month to discuss the outlook for this year.

Ford Abandons Engine Plan

Ford Motor has dropped plans to sell a six-cylinder engine that would save gasoline by running on only three cylinders under some circumstances. Plans for the engine were scuttled because prototypes did not get the hoped-for increase in fuel economy and because the engine tid not perform as well as expected, a Ford spokesman says. The engine, called 6 "3 by 6," has electronic controls that in effect turn off half of its cylinders at about 45 miles per hour and during deceleration to about 25 mph. After about 18 months of testing, however, the engine got only about 6 per cent better dues efficiency than normal six-cylinder engines Ford engineers had expected an improvement of between 10 per cent and 15 per cent. Ford planned to put the engine into some 1979 model lightduty trucks, due to go on sale this fall. Now, a spokesman says, the company might offer o similar eight-cylinder engine, but not before the 1980 model year, if then,

Fukuda Asks For Meeting With Carter

TOKYO, Jan. 11 (UPI) .- Japanese Premier Takeo Fukuda, whose country has been under heavy U.S. pressure to reduce its trade surplus, has asked for a meeting with President Carter, it was disclosed today.

The announcement came as presidential trade envoy Robert Stranss arrived here to try to conclude a truce in the five-month U.S.-Japan trade dispute. The United States is still dissatistied with the level of dons, however.

taro Abe said Mr. Fukuda's request for a meeting with Mr. Carter was conveyed to the U.S. government about a week ago by Jananese Ambassador to the United States Fumiliko Togo.

Though Japan has made some concessions to allow increased imports of U.S. farm products, Mr. Fukuda has been under pressure from his own farmers-on important part of his political constituency-not to give in to U.S. demands.

But with the United States plainly unhappy, Mr. Fukuda is expected to present his country's case directly to Mr. Center in an effort to defuse protectionist sentiment in the United States. The two countries will issue a communique Friday setting forth steps Japan is taking to reduce an overall 1977 trade surplus estimated at $17 billion, including an $8-billion trade surplus with the United States The accord is aimed as easing pressure for trade protectionist legislation in Congress, which reconvenes Jan. 19. However, U.S. negotiators see it as only a first step in liberization of Japanese

Wolff is continuing to push for a Japanese promise to reduce Japan's balance-of-payments surphis to zero in 1979. He was also making last-ditch efforts to persuade the Japanese to make further reductions in the tariff Japan applies to color

U.S. Retail Sales Fall 0.7 Per Cent In Latest Month

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11 IAP-DJ),---U.S. retail sales dropped an unexpected 0.7 per cent in December, the steepest decline since the 1.7-per-cent decrease registered last January, the Commerce Department reported today.

December sales totaled a seasonally-adjusted $61.05 billion, off from a downward-revised $61.49 billion in November. Administration economists had been expecting a stronger December performance, as weekly retail-sales reports had indicated an upward trend and many big retailers had said they were pleased with Christmas results. Courtenay Stater, the department's chief economist, tended to play down the decline, stressing that total sales during the fourth quarter were strong. Sales in the quarter were 3.8-per-cent higher than during the third quarter, when they rose 1.5 per cent from the second quarter. Commerce Secretary Juanita Kreps said today that "the pa tern of retail sales may shift during 1978, with a possible leveling out in automobile sales until consumers are more familiar with the down-sized models."

She also said the "recent high level of housing starts is likely to diminish somewhat during 1978. but a high rate of housing com-pletions will strengthen sales of household durables." U.S. Merger Activity CHICAGO, Jan. 11 (Reuters).-Despite accelerated merger ac-

U.S. Jobless Rate Falls to

Level Is the Lowest Since October, 1974

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11 (AP) The U.S. unemployment rate dropped sharply in December to its lowest level in more than three years, the government announced loday. President Carter promptly halled the improve-ment as "good news for the country." The joble:s rate declined to 6.4 per cent from November's revised 6.7 per cent, the Labor Department reported. This enabled the administration to precisely meet its goal of reducing unemployment to an average rate of 6.6 per cent for the October-

December quarter. While a jobless rate of 6.4 per cent is still high by historical standards, the December figure was the lowest since October, 1974, when it was 6.1 per cent and was climbing to a peak of 9.1 per cent in the 1974-75 recession. At a hastily arranged White House meeting with reporters present, Mr. Carter asked Charles Schultze, his chief economic adviser, whether administration plans for major tax cuts later this year would still be im-cent since last April Some 480,000 workers were removed from the jobless rolls last month, leaving 6,3 million un-employed, the lowest total since the recession in late 1974.

Total employment last month rose by 410,000 to 92.6 million, continuing a steady expansion that put 4.1 million persons in the ranks of the employed in 1977. The government said the 4.1million increase in employment last year marked the biggest 12-

month gain ever recorded in the post-World War II period. The number of employed adult men

rose by 1.8 million and of adult women by 1.7 million, while teen agers advanced their employment by nearly 650,000 over the year. At 6.4 per cent, the unemploy-ment rate in December was nearly a full percentage point below the rate at the beginning of 1977, when 7.3 per cent of the labor force was jobless. The statistics are adjusted to take into account usual seasonal fluctuations in employment, such as the hiring of temporary store clerks for the Christmas shopping period. Thus, such temporary jobs had no major bearing on the December figures. The unemployment rate in 1977 averaged 7 per cent for the year, comparing favorably with a 7.7per-cent average in 1976 and an average of 8.5 per cent in 1975.

Frank Lloyd Wright, who had an establishment near town, and whose cook went berserk and killed several people, including Wright's mistress. The heart childhood is as fictional as Ten Sawyer, Schorer is saying: yet the overall effect of his and biographical pieces is not gloom.

The old idea that a two notrump opening bid must be based on stoppers in all four suits has been abandoned by almost all experts, since failure to make the bid with the appropriate point-count creates impossible rebid problems. South therefore opened with two no-trump, un-concerned about the club weakness, and heard his partner respond three diamonds.

This was a transfer bid, promising heart length, and his inten-tion was to pass the normal three-heart rebid. But as South held a massive heart fit and an ideal hand for a suit contract, he jumped to four hearts. He expected to have a good play for 10 tricks opposite a hand containing nothing but five small hearts. He was entirely right about this but the bad heart break apparently doomed the contract to defeat,

A spade was led, and East's queen was captured by the ace in the closed hand. The lead of the heart ace then revealed the fact that West held two natural trump tricks, but as the sequel

The Running Game

Tha Cowboys gain 4.2 yards a rush, which is good but not great. Dorsett can run wide, and elso likes to cut up the middle and then break out. Robert New-house, the fullback, is an inside possession-type runner. There are no tendencies left or right, as the Cowboys run everywhere. The wide reverses to the flanker, Drew Pearson, or the tight end, Billy Jce DuPree, must be

The Passing Game

It presents a lot of problems. For example, Dorsett can pass off a run play, a terrorising prospect to cornerbacks. (Dorsett completed a 34-yero pass on his only attempt.) Landry has shown this play only once, probably for the edification of a then-unknown Super Bowl opponent. He will have about 14 passing plays ready. Drew Pearson is the leading receiver, with 48 receptions averaging 18.1 yards, which is a lot. But the halfback position, shared by Dorsett and Preston Pearson caught 75 passes, or 35 per cent of Staubach completions. Al-though now second-string, Preston Pearson cannot be underestimated, and when he comes in they are going to pass. The tight ends, DuPree and Saldi.

Staubach is difficult to sack, because he moves well and has fairly good pass blocking.

The Defense

The Cowboy defenders read the key moves in the offense as the play develops and then react to stop it. The best way to attack the flex defense is to go straight at it with drive-blocking, and the worst way is to get cute with traps. If a guard pulls out tha middle knebacker, Bob Breunig, will immediately whip through that hole and raise havoc. On passing downs, they often bring in two extra backs, Randy Hughes, who has the size of a linebacker, and Mark Washing-ton, in place of two dinebackers, Breunig and D.D. Lewis, Then they have five people in the short zones playing man to man, and the two caleties, Charlie Waters and Cliff Harris, covering the deep zones. Harris and Waters are so good that it's not encouraging to throw down the middle. Whatever vulnerability the Dallas riciense has is outside against the cornerbacks, Aaron Kyle and Benny

The New York Times commissioned scouts to analyze the two Super Bowl teams. The accompanying reports were prepared by Jack Faulkner of the Los Angeles Rams and George Young of the Miami Dolphins, with the assistance of William N. Wallace of The Times. Faulkner reports on the Lallas Cowboys, the National Conference champlans, and Young reports on the Denver Broncos, the American Conference champions. The teams will meet in New Orleans on Sunday.

Scouts usually feel it is unprofessional to try to pick winners; the outcome of the game, they say, is incidental to their analyses. But in this case Faulkner and Young agree Dallas has the better team.

Miller, for years an assistant coach for offense, is basically sound in the offensive game, although sometimes he likes to get cute and try to finesse the defenses with misdirection sucker plays. He is not the kind of coach to blow the bugie and yell, "Charge!"

Although he was new at Denver this season, Miller did not change the team much Joe Collier, who has been on the Bronco staff since 1969, remained in charge of the defense. The offense plot, evolved by Max Coley in a prior coaching regime, was similar to what Miller taught during his last appointments, at New England and Baltimore.

The Playing Surface The home field of the Broncos is grass, but they have had a lot of experience on synthetic turf like the Superdome's and expect no trouble. The Astroturf would be an advantage to a darting type of runner like Otis Armrong, but he has been in the dorhouse lately and has not

The Offense

If Denver is going to win the Super Bowl, then Riley Odoms, the tight end, and Haven Moses, the flanker, must have big games. The main idea of the Broncos' offensive game plan is to try to manipulate the Dallas defense so there will be one-on-one pass coverage on either Odoms or

This can be attempted in various ways, and one way is the slot formation that the Broncos used on 32 of 63 plays against Oakland in their play-off game. This formation places both wide receivers, Moses and Jack Dolbin, on the same side of the field. Odoms can do everything. He was the team's leading receiver, with 37 catches, but against Daliss, the Broncos believe, they have to get him into the game even more. Craig Morton, the quarterback, must get the ball to him.

Morton fakes a running play nimost every time he sets up to pass, and he is good at it, making the play hard to read for linebackers. To get a first down in a passing situation, he likes to throw to Moses, who will fake a deep pattern and then come back on a book. This will burden the Cowboy cornerbacks.

Because he has so little mobility, Morton has been dropped a lot. Denver quarterbacks were sacked 50 times, the third-highest total in the league, and the best Dallas pass rusher, Harvey Mar-tin, is matched against the weakest Bronco lineman, Andy Maurer, the left tackle.

In previous years with other teams. Morton's pass attempts were an adventure; you never knew how they would come out. But this season he cut his interceptions to eight, one of the lowest totals in the league, by not taking risks.

Morton was in the final regular-eason game against Dallas for only three plays, and the game ended in a 146 defeat. Denver used Craig Penrose and Norris Weese instead. For this reason and because both sides already had clinched division titles, what developed has no bearing on the Super Bowl contest. Throw that

The Broncos use the three-four alignment, with four active, quick linebackers. This defense blitzes with high frequency, and someone will be coming at Roger Staubach on almost every play. It is Collier's defense, one evolved over a long period, and the personnel have been there for oute a while It is a defense that uses a lot of tricks, such as slants and many combinations, mixing the charge of the three linemen and the four

Super Bowl? Super Bore—a Dissent

By George F. Will

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11 (WP), -Mankind does best when following tradition. But occasionally mankind trusts its unassisted intellect, with unfortunate results. Pootball is one such result, and the Super Bowl is Western civilisation's crowning mistake. It also is the purest expression of some tendencies that began in the 1930s, when sport became spec-

Super Bowl XII will be played this year (MCMLXXVIII) in a television studio (New Orleans's Superdome) before what television people call "a live audience." There will be about 85 million viewers, and sponsors will pay $325,000 a minute for advertising

Long ago I carned the pelting abuse of football fans by observing that football is popular (and semi-yucky) because it mbron modern life. It is a mixture of violence and committee meetings (called huddles), and is the moral equivalent of the President's energy program: unnecessary

The Broncos have turned Denver into something like an amiable Nuremberg rally: mass hysteria without crime. But Dallas fans are proud of their team's icy use of computers. Dallas coaches are said to be feeding their computers the dates the Denver players' wives last had babies. Together, the teams express football: frenzy and calculation. And the Super Bowl expresses an American art form: hoopla.

The 1920s were "the golden age of sport," primarily because of five heroes: Red Grange, Babe Ruth, Bobby Jones, Bill Tilden, Jack Dempsey. But those heroes were less causes than effects of new American habits. Sports in the 1930s reflected America's change from a production-oriented to a consumption-oriented society, and to the nation's new zest for hoople.

According to Frederick Lewis Allen, the 1920s were "the ballyhoo years," marked by the un-paralleled rapidity and unanimity with which millions of men and women turned their attention. their talk and their emotional interest upon a series of tremendous trifles—a heavyweight boxing match, a murder trial, a new automobile model, a transatiantic flight. Mass production came of age, not just mass production of automobiles but also of fads like Mah-Jong and crossword puzzles, estate boom, and heroes, especially frenzies like the Florida real sports beroes whose exploits were communicated to a mass audience by radio. The ability to hear sports fed the desire to see sports. The first fight to be broadcast was Dempsey against Georges Carpentier at Boyles Thirty Acres in Jersey City in 1921. Some 90,000 speciators produced the first $1-million

In 1926, Dempsey fought Gene Tunney in Philadelphia in front of 130,000. In 1927 they fought in Chicago's Soldier Pield. Twentyfour special trains brought some of the 145,000 spectators, many of whom were seated too far from the ring to see who won. within a predictable time frame. Football's congestion, unlike baseball's geometry, is sport suited to television's small screen. And the Super Bowl is the purest expressim of sport tailored to a consumer society's ravenous appetite for entertainment.

It involves the highest ratio of hoopla to event; indeed, it bhirs the distinction between hopla and event. In the 1920s sports events became speciacles: crowd sizes, revenoes and athletes' earnings were as newsworthy as the score. In the 1970s, at the Super Bowl the spectacle is the event.

Blunt Note to India

WASHINGTON.-While on his recent trip, President Carter was overheard on a live TV microphone telling Secretary of State Cyrus Vance that when they got back frome they would write a blunt letter to

"This is one of the taughest hlunt letters I've ever had to write." Blunt told me.

"What makes it tougher than a blunt note to the Soviet Union?" 'India is a Third World power, and they're very touchy. It's taken several years to get over their hurt when we tilted toward Pakistan, and we'd like to keep good relations with them if we possibly can. So we have to make the letter blunt but yet not hit them over the head."

"That does pose a problem." "The White House has rejected several drafts of blunt notes I've sent over there."

Sir Thomas More Is Honored at London Exhibit

The Poet Who Put Galesburg on the Map

By Douglas E. Kneeland

GALESBURG, III. (NYT).—They celebreted Carl Sandburg's birthday last weekend in this prairie city, the home of

The people of Galesburg turned out to honor their city's most famous son, a number of Gandburg scholars and biographers were here, and philatelists showed up to get the commemorative stamo issued in honor of the centenary, Howard K. Smith, the ABC News commentator, came, and Burl Ives, the singer, and Gwendolyn Brooks, the Pulitzer Prize-winning poet laureate of Illinois, Santiburg's daughters, Margaret, Janet and Helga, were here,

And, in a way, so was the craggy, whitehadred poet.

"Can't you see him?" asked Miss Brooks as the celebration, which is to continue on weekends this month, opened in the crowded gymnesium of Knox College. Nice white hair carefully careless, mien carefully serious, stare carefully droll and semi-hurt. And you can hear him, tone carefully droll and drawly.

"He was a largeness, and easy in his day. He stood large in what turned out be (after much care) raw wheat, much blown by wind.

" Poetry is the achievement of the synthesis of hyecinths and biscults, he said. He felt also, I think, that poetry could be the synthesis of trash and order, the synthesis of forced bloodiness and peace."

Amid Cornfields

This western Hilmois city, now swollen to 37,000 inhabitants, was where Sandburg was born and where he lived most of his first 24 years. Then it was a railroading town amid cornfields, the place where his unlettered fether toiled all his working life as a blacksmith's helper at the old Chicago, Burlington & Quincy yards. And when the poet-troubadour-novelist-story teller-biographer of Lincoln died in 1967 his ashes were brought back to this flat predrie from the mountains of North Caroling where he had lived since 1945.

He was buried beneath a red granate rock in the backyard of the three-room house near the tracks where he was born Jan. 6, 1878, the son of Swedish immigrants. "He grew up in the generation that struggled for existence," said Loren Goff, the retired curator of the birthplace which is preserved by the state as a historic landmark. "That's why I say Carl Sandburg is what America stands for. Sandburg, his daughter Helga Sandburg Crile said in an interview here, was a "poet of the Midwest." In the poem

"Prairie." he wrote: I was born in the prairie in the milk of its wheat, red of its clover, the eyes of its women gave me a

I have loved the prairie as a man with a heart shot full of pain

"What he wrote about Galesburg was very sweet," said Mrs. Crile. "He wrote about when he was a boy running up and down the streets. They love him in Galesburg. I think he was glad to get away, but every time he came back, he came with nostalgia because they didn't drive

Galesburg has long honored him as its most famous son. Nest signs march along Main Street, pointing the way to the Carl Sandburg hirtiplace. The community junior college, now occupying modern buildings on a new campus in the northwest part of town, is called Carl Sandburg Junior College, And the shopping center that has taken a sizable chunk of his beloved prairie along the fast-food and filling-station strip that is Henderson Street is named Sandburg Mall.

One of their own made it, reassuring the people of Galesburg that the promise of America is true. And they turned out in some numbers for events celebrating his hirthday, many more, of course, to hear Howard K. Smith talk and Burl Ives stop than to listen to the long discussions of "Sandburg's roots" by the scholars and blographers.

Folk Songs

Sandburg himself might not have cared much for all the talk and digging at his "roots," but he probably would have liked the folk songs his daughter Heiga and Ives sang in his memory. After all, he made a good part of his living over the years with his guitar and he turned to the songs he had collected along the byways of Amer-

Besides, as Smith, who did two television documentaries with him, recalled, Sandborg liked to keep things simple.

Smith said that he once asked Sandburg what he thought of the works of George Bernard Show and that the poet had answered: "Too cerebral, too cerebral." Certainly not everything last weekend was "too cerebrah" but Mrs. Crile guessed that what her father probably would have liked best was the stamp in his honor, she the stemp better than the Nobel Prize. He never won that award, although he received Pulitzers for his poetry and for his Lincoln works.

As for herself, she was pleased by the portrait on the stemp, which was done by William Smith. "I was glad it didn't make him look too strong," she said. "He was a poet. People always think of 'Chicago' when they think of my father, but he was one of the great lyric poets of our time." Sandburg might also have enjoyed the small gathering to Carl Sandburg Junior College's "quiet lounge," which was promptly renamed the Carl Sandburg Lounge. Of the 100 or so in attendance. many were townspeople getting on in years. In their attentiveness, they seemed to be searching for themselves in the poet, who as they would say, "put Galesburg on the

Spell Broken

After Beisy Hippely, a faculty member, did a dramatic reading from "The World of Carl Sandburg," the spell was broken by Mrs. Frank Sutor, arising to make a presentation on behalf of the alumni of Lambard Coffege, now Knox College, which Samburg attended for three and a half years eitter service in the Spanish-Amercan War, although his earlier education had ended with the eighth grade.

"It's kind of hard to come down to earth, isn't it, after hearing Betsy," Mrs. Sutor eaid with what appeared to be more dmiration for the energetic performer than for the poet.

As the weekend drew to a close, some mixed emotions were acknowledged by Mrs. Crile, who writes and performs as Helga Sandburg and whose latest book, "A Great & Giorious Romance," which is about her father and her mother, Islian Steichen, sister of Edward Steichen, the photographer, is being brought out for the centenary by Harcourt Brace Jovanowich Inc.

"Actually, this kind of a meeting is so depressing," she said, "These people say he did this or that and smiled, How do they know he smiled? I never write that he smiled when he did something."

Amused by Story

Still, she was amused by a story told by William Smith the artist. Smith had, related how some friends of Sandburg. who was then immersed in his Lincoln books, had hired an actor to dress like Lincoln and confront the writer on one of his customery daily walks along a beach. As Smith told it, the actor, a Lincoln look-alike in top hat and beart, appeared out of the fog along the beach and Sand-burg merely tipped his hat, said, "Good

Where did he get that, wondered Margaret Sandburg, who, like her sister Janet, always lived at home and for years acted as a secretary to her father and Jovanovich is also putting out a volume of unpublished Sandburg poems, "Breathing Tokens," which she edited.

Mrs. Crile sald, "Smith got it from Steinbeck in Bussia. Steinbeck got it from en old Ed Sullivan column. And Sullivan got at from Ben Hecht, who made

PEOPLE: Some Talented U.S. Wome Make Worst-Dressed List

Majors and rock-and-roll singer Linds Ronstadt topped the an-mual list of the "world's worstdressed women" released by fashion critic Mr. Blackwell. In his 18th jibe at women in the public eye, Blackwell also found fault with the clothing of entertainers Charo and Anita Bryant and actress Diane Keaton. He described Miss Kenton's wardrobe as "ashcan fashions from her local alley." He said that Miss Fawcett-Majors had "enough splits in her dress for an earth-quake." The balance of the list named country singer Dolly Parten, singer Marie Osmond, actress Dyan Cannon, tennis star Chris Evert and Canada's Margaret Trudeau. Blackwell ac-knowledged that his list includes some of the most talented women in America. "If I didn't think they were great talents, I probably wouldn't have noticed them."
